SAVED BY A BIG GRAY RAT.

Professor Churchill's Thrilling Experience in a Caving Arizona Mine.

"You were asking about that stuffed rat in my room," said Professor Churchill, the mining expert, to a New York Sun man. "The story concerns an experience that made my hair curl. I was once retained to report upon the workings of a mine called the Little Whoop Up, in southern Arizona. On an adjoining claim was another mine called the Atlas. A dispute arose. The Atlas people claimed that the lower tunnel of the Whoop Up had been bored into the ground and a half million in ore taken out. The first thing to do was to make a survey of the Whoop Up, and of course the Whoop Up people objected. Finally an order for the survey was secured by the court and Dr. John R. Parks and I were sent to make the survey. There are tricks in all trades, and the Whoop Up superintendent knew a few. When we reached the mine he said that the tunnel we wished to explore was in a dangerous condition. There had been a cave, the timbers were rotten, and so on. It meant a 10 to one chance that we would be crushed if we tried it. Of course, we classed him as a liar, though he turned out to be right.

"We worked our way in the tunnel until we ran against a jam of fallen timbers which were sound and were plainly arranged to stop our progress. Parks went back for an ax, while I worked at the roof with a pick to dislodge the center pieces. I succeeded and had climbed half way over into the other side of the tunnel when there came a terrific crash of loose ore from the roof. It fell on both sides of the timbers, pinning me in a hole which would have been a grave right there but for a few sticks which held the mass of ore above. The place was barely large enough to move in, and I knew it was certain death in a few hours unless Parks could dig me out. Even then I believed I was gone, for I did not know how much ore had fallen. In a few minutes the air got heavy, and my eyes began to feel drowsy, and it seemed like the roof and sides of the hole were closing in on me. This oppression and drowsiness increased until I was forced to hammer the sides of the place with my fists and head to keep awake. Still not a sound could I hear from the outside, and only the slow crumbling of ore from above. The foul air was getting into my brain, and I think I was actually insane with the fearful dread of being buried alive. Anyhow, I remember dropping to the floor of the hole, and giving a few faint shouts which echoed back into my ears. I had given up all hope, and was almost swooning when I heard a strange scraping sound above me. I yelled, but received no answer, and then threw my body against the wall and tried to pick out the ore from between the lodged timbers. Still came the queer, scraping noise which seemed to come nearer and nearer and sounded not unlike the steady grinding of a saw. It seemed to last for hours, though it could hardly have been a minute after when a bit of earth dropped to my feet from the upper end of the wall, and along with it came a big gray mine rat, who saved my life, for he left a clear hole for his trail, and through it came a breath of fresh air that gave life to me. The fellow had bored his way from the shaft side of the cave. I stayed there two hours after that until Parks found the cave, got help, and got me out without breaking the air hole. I caught the gray rat, too, and kept him well fed until he died, and wouldn't take a lot of money for his skin now."

Wonderful Texas Mirages.

"You don't have to go to the Desert of Sahara in order to see mirages," said Lee Buchanan to the corridor man at the Laclede. "In Texas these phenomena can be witnessed in as wonderful forms as are ever produced in any part of the world. In that portion of the State marked upon the maps of the olden time as a desert where no plant can grow or breathing thing can live, but which is now cut up into immense wheat or grazing fields, I have experienced the most life like and natural optical delusions of which the mind can conceive. For that matter, the entire prairie appears to be a delusion. The air is so rare that no odor is perceptible, even from carrion. As a man rides along he sees before him beautiful groves of majestic trees, which, when reached, prove to be mesquite bushes three or four feet in height. Over the plain are what appear to be stakes six or eight feet high, which in reality are Spanish daggers about a foot in height, the entire plain being called 'Staked Plain,' from the effect produced by this plant. The best mirage or cloud pictures are to be seen about Amarillo, where beautiful lakes appear to be, but a mile or two away, and strangers almost invariably ask if they contain fish. Views of the gulf are occasionally had, and once a steamer in distress was seen, and it was learned that a steamer had been lost at sea at that time."—St. Louis Globe.

He Measured 80 Inches.

In the resting place of the old kings of Denmark, the Cathedral of Roeskilde, a recent visitor notes that there is a column against which a number of monarchs have been measured and upon which their different heights are recorded. One of them is Peter the Great, and we learn by this means that the shipwright czar measured no less than eighty Danish inches, equivalent to something like six feet ten inches in our measurement. Only one other of the sovereigns was taller, and that was Christian I., of Denmark, who, according to this authority, was just a trifle over seven feet English. The czar, Alexander III., is about six feet one inch and is about a couple of inches taller than Christian IX. of Denmark and about four inches taller than King George of Greece, neither of whom, nevertheless, is what would be called a short man. It is worth nothing that in the same ancient cathedral where this column is to be seen Saxo Grammaticus, the Danish historian from whom Shakespeare borrowed practically the entire plot of "Hamlet," lies buried.

A Good Story of Browning.

Lord Coleridge's lecture on "Education and Instruction," delivered last June in the Salt Schools, Shipley, Yorkshire, is published in the Contemporary Review. Included in the article is Lord Coleridge's story of Browning: "He once rebuked me in a way which I relate for the comfort of those small, striving souls who watch his flights and try to follow his course in vain, till he disappears from them in the clouds. He was so kind as to give me many of his volumes, and he knew I honestly read them. Soon after one had thus been given me he asked me how I liked it. I replied that what I could understand I heartily admired and that parts of it I thought ought to be immortal; but that as to much of it I really could not tell whether I admired it or not, as I could not understand it. 'Ah, well,' he said, 'if a reader of your calibre understands 10 per cent. of what I write I think he ought to be content.'"

Deafness Caused by Cattarrh.

Capt. S. F. Belyea, of Greenwich, King's Co., N. B., suffered from an aggravated form of catarrh which had in his case induced serious deafness, closed the nasal passages so that he could scarcely breath and caused him great pain and trouble. He tried many remedies, but all failed until he got Hawker's Cattarrh Cure, three 25 cent packages of which effected a cure. "I can honestly say" says capt. Belyea "that I am practically well, and I take great pleasure in recommending Hawker's Catarrh Cure to those who may be suffering from this very troublesome disease."

'TIS STRANGE BUT TRUE.

How Two Lost Articles Were Recovered Recently in Toronto.

Here are two singular coincidences connected with the recovery of lost property, both of which have lately occurred in Toronto. If either one of them should be made an incident in the plot of a novel, the imagination of the author would be credited with rather a wide flight of fancy, and yet they are both strictly true.

On Saturday evening a gentleman, who was walking home along St. Patrick street, found on the sidewalk a violin bow, which he picked up and carried home, pending any inquiries that might be made by its owner. Yesterday, on his way down town, as he turned off St. Patrick down McCaul street, the whirling of a gust of wind blew to his feet a sheet of written paper, which he also picked up. On reading it, he found with surprise that it was an advertisement for the lost bow, offering a reward for its recovery, and giving the address of the owner. It transpired that the would-be advertiser had, during the morning, passed by the same streets as on the evening previous, and had dropped his paper by accident not far from the spot where he had dropped the bow. That the latter, during its flighty career around the corners, should have been blown to the feet of the same man as had found the lost article, and that it should have been noticed and read by him, may fairly be considered a very singular coincidence.

But the following is even more singular. Some time ago a well known citizen, while walking along Adelaide street, lost a gold locket from his watch chain, which he valued very highly. He advertised for it, offering a reward for its return, and the next day it was brought to his office by a workingman who had found it, but who refused the proffered reward. The locket was returned to the chain, but not securely fastened, and a few days ago, while its owner was mailing some letters, it again dropped off and was lost. An advertisement was sent to the papers concerning it, and the next day it was returned by its former finder, who had not seen the advertisement but who had recognized the locket on picking it up, and at once brought it round to its owner. This time he was urged to accept a reward, but firmly refused. That locket is pretty well fastened on now, needless to say.

If this sort of thing were to occur very often, the advertising business would be ruined, as anyone who lost anything would simply sit round and wait for a coincidence to bring it back to him.—The Mail.

CROTCHETY PROFESSOR HUXLEY.

Always at War With Somebody and a Believer in the Sea Serpent.

Professor Huxley, the great scientist, is a keen-eyed, sharp-featured man, with curly whitish side whiskers, but is clean shaven as to lip and chin, and is rising nine and sixty. He is quite crotchety, almost cranky, in his ways, and is renowned for his irascible temper, being almost always engaged in a fierce war of words with somebody. When he smites an opponent he falls upon him with all his might and literally whirls him away. He is naturally weighed down with different degrees, and he recently received what Lippincott calls the somewhat dubious honor of being made a privy councillor. He lives in Sussex, in a house especially designed for him by his son-in-law. He calls it "Hodeslea," which is the ancient form of his surname. A rather good story is told of the way a local guide used to make the professor show himself at his library window to visitors from all parts of the country. He would take a group of tourists to a wall close to the great man's house and say to them, "Now watch your chance; here he comes," at the same time throwing a handful of gravel against the window, whereat the professor would appear foaming with rage and shaking his fists at the innocent visitors, who would retire much perplexed and sometimes spread the report that the professor was demented. He is perhaps best known as the popularizer of the Darwinian theory of evolution. He is also a devout believer in the existence of the sea serpent, and declares that those who laugh at the idea of a monster serpent existing in the deep are big enough to drag down whole ships and their crews are foolish and ignorant. Indeed, he holds this opinion of all those who do not agree with him. He is the bete noire of the autograph hunter, whose existence he does not see. Yet he relates with much gusto how his postman not long since asked him for an autograph, confessing frankly that he did not know what the professor's business was, but explaining that he "had heard folks say as how he was something superior."

Whale Fishing Figures.

The whale is destined to disappear from the North Pacific much more speedily than he was driven from the eastern approaches to the Arctic. The whale fleet sailing out of the western ports last year caught in the Arctic regions no less than 353 whales. The product of the season's catch would have been represented by about $2,000,000 had prices remained as they were about three years ago. When one small steamer takes 62 whales in a single season, and a still smaller one kills 64, there is a striking illustration of what steam is doing for the extermination of the whale in the Pacific. There will be no restriction. The whale fishery by sailing vessels has for some time been unprofitable. What the sailing craft could not do in a lifetime of years the steam whaler will pretty effectually accomplish in a very few years.

A New Tadpole.

Some tadpoles recently born at the London Zoo have not the black and forbidding aspect of the tadpole which is one of the common objects of a country walk in March. These tadpoles are largely colorless, and have an engaging way of balancing themselves on their heads, instead of wriggling up to each other like our familiar acquaintances. The chief merit, however, is the fact that they are the offspring of their parents. They come from eggs deposited by an African frog, which has the rather doubtful distinction of being more like a newt than any other frog. This frog, known technically as xonopus levis, has never before condescended to breed at the Zoo, or in captivity, so its young were very imperfectly known.

The "Royal Baron of Beef."

The "royal baron of beef" for the Queen's Christmas dinner was cut from a prime Devon heifer bred and fed by Her Majesty at the Prince Consort's farm. In conformity with old English custom this cut of beef is always the piece de resistance at Victoria's table on Christmas Day. It weighed 160 pounds. It was roasted at the kitchen fire in the palace, and when cold was sent to Osborne. There, garnished with the royal arms and initials in shredded horseraddish, it occupied a prominent place on the sideboard, together with the boar's head and the big game pie.

Assimilable Phosphorus is the brain and nerve food, par excellence. One bottle of Puttner's Emulsion contains more of this invaluable element than a gallon of the much vaunted stimulants, Liquid Beefs, etc., of the day.

Intense Itching

We cannot tell how that poor boy suffered in all those years. Physicians did not effect a cure. At last I decided to give him Hood's Sarsaparilla, as my druggist recommended it. In about two weeks the Sarsaparilla began to have effect. The sores commenced to heal up; the flesh began to look more natural and healthy. Then the scales came off and all over his body new and healthy flesh and skin formed. When he had taken two bottles he was entirely free from sores, having only the scars to show where they had been. These have all disappeared. We are unable to express our thanks for the good
