Kindness Misplaced.

Last week a divine from Chicago lectured before the Congregational Club. He had before him a breezy delivery, reminiscent of the Windy City. What the subject of the lecture was is not to the point, but it was long drawn out, and he became conscious of the fact, he said, that an audience might have too much of a good thing, like the man who bought a pair of ready-made trousers that were six inches too long. He did not discover this until he had taken them home and cried them out. Then he asked his wife to cut off six inches from the legs. The wife was about to go to prayer meeting.

"I'm no tailor," she said with a toss of her head as she crossed the threshold, "I know nothing about shortening trousers." The man's sister and mother overheard the conversation, and in their heart pitied him.

"John's wife don't treat him right," said the mother while her sister was in the parlor entertaining a caller. "I'll just fix up those trousers." She cut off six inches and folded them up just as they came from the store, intending that he should have a pleasant surprise the next morning.

After the sister's caller was gone she got to thinking of John's ungrateful wife. "Poor fellow," said she, "I must fix those trousers for him." She likewise cut off six inches and then rolled them up again as neatly as when they came out of the store.

Now, it happened that Mrs. John was touched at the prayer meeting and on her way home got to thinking what a good husband Mr. John was, how thoughtful and considerate he had always been and how he had often sacrificed his own pleasure and comfort for hers, and her heart was smitten with remorse.

"I will not sleep this night," said she "until I have fixed the dear fellow's trousers."

Once again the shears were applied, and six inches more were cut away from the bottom of the legs.

John's dismay was great in the morning when he put the trousers on again, expecting to roll them up London fashion at the bottom.—Indianapolis Journal.

ESTEEMED EXCHANGES.

Montreal Star: We think Mr. Foster was wrong when he found fault with Mr. Blair for turning his back upon the Opposition members who were criticising the Drummond deal. In matters of this kind, much must be left to the personal taste of honorable members. Mr. Foster is a man of aesthetic taste, we admit; but there is always room for difference of opinion on questions of personal beauty, and there may be perfectly honest differences of opinion on the question whether a rear elevation of Mr. Blair is more pleasing to the eye than a front elevation. Certain it is for the honorable Minister to decide whether his northern or his southern aspect is the more beautiful. Mr. Foster should remember that Mr. Blair has been under heavy fire lately, and that men than he have turned their backs to the enemy in moments of panic.
