

Treatment of Heart Disease.

There seems to be in this city, and perhaps it is equally noticeable in other communities, a growing complaint of heart affections, and the Medical and Surgical Reporter had an article recently on this subject, in which rest is recommended as the best remedy for some kinds of heart troubles.

By this, says the editor, we mean not positively but comparative rest; neither do we refer to inflammatory affections of the heart, wherein, from the very gravity of the disease, confinement to bed and consequent rest become necessarily assured. We are thinking of those cases of heart exhaustion, so to speak, of individuals whose general health and tonicity is much run down, from overwork or abuse, and in whom the heart shares in this general vitiation. Possibly the organ is not in itself diseased; its organic integrity may be perfect, but its muscular walls may be flabby and weak, ready to yield, or, more properly, unable to resist any great strain. If, when in this condition, the man resorts to any violent muscular exercise, or subjects himself to the influence of violent physical emotions, this weak heart may become mechanically distended, it its efforts to perform the extra labor demanded of it. Or it may be that dilatation has already taken place to some extent; then does it become important to allow the organ time for the development of the beneficent hypertrophy that will do so much to preserve its integrity. By rest we mean to advise your patients who are threatened with or already have dilatation of the heart to do everything slowly to perform every act of life deliberately, and to avoid as far as possible, all occasions calculated to excite the passions or emotions. We must ever remember what a delicate machine the heart is, and how easily it can become deranged, and realizing this, must consider how much more care this organ requires when it is already diseased. We must, under such circumstances, walk slowly, eat slowly—in a word, do everything slowly. It is not well, and we do not recommend the carrying of this advice to the verge of laziness; but what we do mean is that while it is well for all (either sound or diseased) to avoid hurry, it is ten times more important, ay, absolutely imperative, for the man with a weak and diseased heart.

The Great French Remedy, Dr. LeDuc's Periodical Pills.

For the cure of Leucorrhoea or White's Excessive or painful Menstruation, Green Sickness, Falling of the Womb, Catarrh of the Uterus or Vagina, Hysteria, Pain in the Back, or Piles, or for the purpose of invigorating and giving tone to the Generative Organs, two pills should be taken twice daily, or in very enfeebled conditions, one pill three times a day. To effect cures in chronic cases it will be necessary to continue the use of the remedy for some months. A reasonable trial will create sufficient confidence in the remedy to insure its being taken until a permanent cure is effected.
