"S" has been found to be the most frequently used capital letter.

Back in the car again. Mark looked at his watch. "Can you stand another night at the hotel?" he asked, Valerie nodded with enthusiasm, but Lucy glanced with hardly tell them that besides the Ark her capital consisted of a nickel! "You see, it's almost dinner time. If we stay here we can get an early start and probably make Wide Acres by evening with ease."

"Of course," thought Lucy, "he couldn't imagine anybody with only five cents. What's a ten-dollar night hotel to him?"

But she changed her mind later in the evening. As they left her at her door, Mark handed her an envelope. He did it so quietly that even Valerie hardly noticed. In her room Lucy tore the envelope open. A hundred-dollar bill lay coisly inside a sheet of hotel note paper.

"Half your first month's salary in advance," Mark had written. "Just to bind the bargain. So you can't walk out on us." Then his initials. Nothing more. Lucy sank down on the tufted satin of her bed. She had never owned a hundred-dollar bill before, she felt like Croesus. Were employers often like this? she wondered.

They reached Wide Acres in time for dinner the next night. Lucy never forgot her first sight of the house. Mark had told her a little about it and she knew it was comparatively new. But as they drove up to the door and she glimpsed its mellow brick beyond the great white pillars of the portico, it was hard to believe it hadn't been there forever. The look in her eyes established her more firmly with Mark than could a week of visiting judges and bankers.

"It's the sort of house you dream about, isn't it?" she said as they went up the steps. "You know, most houses do something to me. But this one—it's probably perfect, isn't it?"

"Am I supposed to look coy and noncommittal?" laughed Mark. "Because I'm a bad actor, I'm pretty crazy about the place myself, to tell you the truth. It looks so completely an old-timer, and yet it's just a youngster, really. I don't quite know how it got its atmosphere, but there it is."

"Things are like that when you love them, I guess," said Lucy. Chiltern opened the door. The spirit in which the two men's hands met was obvious, although all Mark said was, "Well Chiltern!" And Chiltern answered, "It's good to see you back sir."

Mrs. Banwood stood in the background, primmer than ever, waiting to be greeted. And there were still-smiling Alice and Katie, the other maid. Lucy was explained, to them all simply as "Miss Tredway, who has come to us as Miss Valerie's tutor."

Island Boys Touring Britain

Ronald Leard, 17, of Summerside, P.E.I., looks on as Michael Quayley, Toronto, examines a "cat o' nine tails" on the old H.M.S. Victory at Portsmouth, England. Leard and Robert Nelson, Charlottetown, are among 50 Canadian youths touring Britain as guests of industrialist Garfield Weston.

Lucy would never tell if he didn't. And for all Valerie's naivete, Lucy had a notion inquiries would not get very far with her. She felt more than a little strange as she followed Mrs. Banwood to her rooms with Valerie at their heels. What standing had a tutor? She had read that secretaries in great houses often had their meals served upstairs to avoid embarrassment. But what happened to tutors? What was a tutor's rating? To be continued
