SOVIET SHIPS ON VISIT

Speedy Modernization Is Aim For British Tories

By GEOFFREY WHITEHEAD

LONDON (Reuters) — Conservative party leader Sir Alec Douglas-Home has ordered a high-speed modernization of his party to regain middle-class support and bring forward new potential leaders before the next election.

Conservatives believe many of the middle class, traditional supporters of the party, either abstained from voting or switched to the minority Liberal party in the Oct. 15 election.

They say this cost 11 seats—enough to lose the election since Labor won by 317 to 304, with nine Liberals.

Douglas-Home has ordered a top-to-bottom reorganization at party headquarters, in the country and in Parliament. In the House of Commons, for example, fresh faces from the Conservative rank-and-file members are being brought forward for "trial runs" in debates.

The biggest change, however, has been the dropping of the former foreign secretary and veteran party strategist, R. A. Butler, 61, from his key job as head of the Conservative research bureau. Butler was replaced by Sir Michael Fraser 48.

In the constituencies, attempts are being made to switch local leadership from titled or cial figureheads to persons more representative of local voters.

Two key young ministers in Douglas-Home's former administration have been appointed to important jobs in the revamping of the party.

Reginald Maudling, 47, former chancellor of the exchequer, is co-ordinating Conservative policy on all domestic issues and is in command of the parliamentary opposition when Douglas-Home is away.

Edward Heath, 48, former trade minister, heads a policy planning body which is thinking out the party's new program.

READY FOR ELECTION

The party leaders are rushing their reform plans into action in case Labor Prime Minister Wilson calls a surprise election early next summer in order to strengthen his vulnerable parliamentary advantage of only five seats.

Top Labor minister say privately, however, that they are thinking in terms of at least a three-year term of office.

A major step in Conservative modernization is expected to come in the method of choosing a new party leader. A survey is being held following strong criticism heard in 1963, when former premier Harold Macmillan resigned and chose Douglas-Home as leader.

Observers believe the new system, whatever it is, will give greater emphasis to the views of members of Parliament.

Douglas - Home 61, has made it clear he willing to remain as leader for some time but he is also anxious to make sure a clear-cut system of choosing his successor is agreed upon by next spring.

California Setting For Movie Resembles Bit Of Old Blighty

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (AP)—There's a bit of Old Blighty in the nearby Conejo Valley these days.

Listen to the accents on the King Rat set and you might think you're in Piccadilly, that's how British it is. The movie is kind of a reverse runaway, being made by a British prducer, director - writer and cast, with the exception of New Yorker George Segal as the Rat h'mself.

The Columbia film is shooting near Thousand Oaks on a ranch owned by the Hawaiian Steamship Company. There studio craftsmen have constructed an amazing replica of Singapore's Changi Prison, where during the war 10,000 Allied prisoners were housed by the Japanese in facilities originally intended for 600.

It's quite a set. The permanent prison towers with harsh reality over clusters of thatched huts designed to house the overflow of prisoners. On the hillsides are scatterings of rootless palms and other portable plants to simulate the tropical foliage. The grass-shy California slopes got a coat of green paint to add to the effect. Total cost of the set: $375,000.

Fourteen English actors were imported for top roles, and they were agumented by members of the local British colony. Extras were a problem. They had to be skinny, if not emaciated and the screen extras guile couldn't supply the hundreds that were needed. Casting agents listed others from state unemployment offices.

Producing King Rat is James Woolf (Room at The Top). The director's former actor Bryan Forbes, who scored last year with his direction of The L-shaped Room.

One day after lunch Forbes paused to explain why the film was being made in California:

"Because it would be impossible to make it in England. Even in the summer there would be no assurance of good weather and we could run into another Cleopatra type of disaster.

"Here we could have shot it in Singapore, but that would have meant transporting a complete cast and crew and finding a thousand Caucasians for prison inmates. And although the prison is still standing, we couldn't shoot outside of it without filming a forest of television aerials."

New Heat Device Can Spot Fish From Aerial Search

VANCOUVER (CP) — Scientists at the fisheries biological station in Nanaimo, across the Strait of Georgia from here, have come up with a device to lead fishermen to the fish. They call it an airborne radiation thermometer.

By picking up surface heat rays, the electronic device allows ocean temperatures to be taken from the air over a wide area.

With instant knowledge of these temperatures, fishermen can easily plot the movements of fish. The result is a saving in fuel and man hours usually spent searching.

British Columbia will show the fastest regional growth in the production of cement in the next few years, says Greenshields Inc., investment dealers, in a recent survey of the Canadian cement industry.

The survey says millions of barrels of cement will be produced in the province in the next few years to feed two giant hydro projects, 15 pulp mills now in the planning or building stages, and a multitude of other construction projects.

Most of this cement will be supplied by Ocean Cement and Supplies Ltd., and Lafarge Cement of North America Ltd.—two firms that dominate the B.C. cement industry.

The survey says 1,600,000 barrels will be needed in the next eight years for the Columbia River hydro projects, 700,000 barrels in four years for the Peace River project and 50,000 barrels each for the 15 pulp mills.

An artificial spawning development, which could more than double sockeye salmon production in the Skeena River system of central British Columbia, has been proposed by federal fisheries engineers and biologists.

The plan calls for spawning channels and flow control projects on the Fulton River and Pinkut Creek, both of which flow into Babine Lake where 90 per cent of Skeena sockeye are spawned.

Fisheries officials estimated the cost of the project at between $2,000,000 and $5,000,000 depending on how far it is followed through.

They said Babine Lake, anarrow 90-mile long lake paralleling the Prince George-Prince Rupert Highway, now supports about 100,000,000 young salmon.

U.S Woman Teacher Admits She Gave Aid To Russians

WASHINGTON (AP) — An American teacher has told the U.S. justice department she furnished information to Soviet agents on Russian artists touring North America, and on Americans who might try to get them to defect.

Files made available by the justice department identify her as Miss Natalie Anna Bienstock, 28, now a graduate student and Russian language teacher at Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y.

She said she mailed one report to the Russians from Vancouver.

A justice official said no action was contemplated against Miss Bienstock because she voluntarily went to the FBI and told about her relatively brief career in international intelligence.

It began in Moscow March 9, 1962 and ended, according to her sworn statements, in February, 1963.

The justice files include several completed and sworn forms Miss Bienstock filled Oct 14 this year setting forth her connection with the Soviet espionage network.

It was learned after hearing her story, the FBI advised Miss Bienstock to complete the forms which are required for people working for foreign governments in this country.

In these documents, she did not explain how she became involved with the Russians.

But she did note she visited Moscow at the end of 1959 and again in February and March of 1962 while employed by Hurok Attractions, Inc. The firm arranged for the visits of Russian artists to North America under the U.S.-Russian cultural exchange agreements.

Miss Bienstock said in her statement she received all of her instruction and training at the Hotel Ukraine in Moscow 9, 1962, during a meeting with Viktor Petrovich Sorine, "a representative of the committee for state security of the U.S.S.R."
