GALLANT AND MACADAM MAKE UPEI HISTORY

BOOK FINISHED ON TIME

By John Cairns

The 1979-80 yearbook is on its way to the printers. The book was completed last weekend and will appear back on campus in April. An additional year end supplement to include senior week and a sports wrap up will be available later.

Editor John Gallant and Assistant Editor Nora MacAdam experienced some tense moments in meeting several of the yearbook deadlines, but meet them they did. The two of them, along with photographers Derwin Banks, Todd MacLaughlan, and Richard Lee, worked virtually alone, and so the credit for the successfully completed task belongs solely with them.

Photographer Derwin Banks has advised the SUN that never before has a UPEI yearbook been finished on time. Indeed, even deadlines were rarely met.

Traditionally UPEI yearbooks have been notoriously late. At best they have appeared only the September after they were due. This has meant that many students have had to leave campus without their books, and the result has been boxes of books sitting uncollected in the yearbook office on the fourth floor of Main Building.

Another problem is that late yearbooks tend to be overly expensive. For each missed copy deadline printing companies charge late fees, and in UPEI's case these additional fees have sometimes been crippling. The extra expense has taken its toll in the length of past books. While most universities have two hundred page yearbooks, late fees have helped force UPEI to keep its book in the one hundred fifty page range.

The most important fact, however, is that for this year at least these problems have been conquered. John Gallant and Nora MacAdam have produced a yearbook in fine style and in record time. In doing so they have saved the Student Union money and provided graduating students with unprecedented convenience. For this we of the SUN staff salute them for a job well done. If all UPEI students had their dedication, the student apathy problem would be no more.
