A Big Drinker.

Alexander Gladman, a negro employed in Cincinnati saloon, has been constantly drunk for three years. Lately he was told he would soon die unless he swore off. He did swear off, but developed a most uncon-mon thirst for water, and an extraordinary appetite for it. On a wager of $100 to $50 he drank three gallons of water without taking the vessel from his lips. He expects to go into a dime museum.

The Shorthorn Trade of 1886.

The fall in the price of pedigree Shorthorns, which has been going on ever since 1883, says the North British Agriculturist, has been as great this year as it was last, when, according to the Almanac of the Live Stock Journal, the 35 auction sales of Shorthorns realized a total of £65,703, this being equivalent to an average of £37 10s, as against an average of about £43 1s for the year 1884. There has been a still further drop in the average this season, as although the number of sales has increased considerably, prices have fallen very low, the net result being that though 1,953 head of pedigree Shorthorns have been sold they have fetched only £60,590 15s 6d, or less by over £5,000 than the 1,750 sold last year. The average, in short, has fallen from £37 10s to £31 0s 6d, and this is almost as low as that at which it stood five or six years ago. The number of sales was 44, as compared to 35 a twelvemonth ago, the most important being that of the well-known Wilerby herd, which was broken up owing to the death of Mr. Booth. The demand for the Booth blood is always very strong, and it is not surprising, therefore, to find that the 57 lots in this sale realised £5,547, or over £97 each, the highest price being 330 guineas for a heifer of the Heccuba family. This was not the highest individual price of the year, as at a sale held in Cumberland a month before Mr. S. P.
Foster, who disposed of only a portion of his herd, obtained 505 guineas for a heifer of the Bates' blood, this heifer being purchased for the Duke of Devonshire's famous herd at Holker. The portion of Mr.
Foster's herd which changed hands made the very satisfactory average of £85 0s 6d, whereas the portion of Sir Wilfred Lawson's neighboring herd at Brayton, sold on the following day, averaged a little more than a fourth of that sum. The third best sale of the year was that of Mr. St. John Acker's herd, the 49 animals in which averaged nearly £68 each; and of three other sales at which the average exceeded £50, the most interesting was that of the Prince of Wales's stock, held at Sandringham during the week of the Royal Agricultural Show at Norwich. Only a portion of the Prince's herd was disposed of, but the gathering was a memorable one, including agricultural visitors from nearly all the British Colonies and from most European countries and the desire to obtain possession of something bred at Sandringham doubtless helped to raise the average. Still, an average of £50 12s 3d for nearly 70 lots spoke volumes for the excellence of the herd; and it may be added that the Prince of Wales's Southdown sheep sold at the same time also fetched good prices. The lowest averages were those of £16 for Mr. Singleton's herd at York and for Mr. Whitford's herd in Cornwall, but in nine other cases the average did not reach £20, so that the general aspect of the year's sales is decidedly unfavorable.

Injury to the Brain.

A most remarkable accident, illustrating the necessity of using the greatest care in fixing cutting tools in machines, is reported in Science. While a wood turner of San Francisco was at work at his trade, a steel chisel became detached from a grooving machine, and struck him in the head, producing a fracture of the bones of the nose, and severely injuring the left eye, so seriously as to destroy that organ and necessitate its removal. After the removal of the eye, the surgeons found behind it a piece of steel $\frac{3}{4}$ inches long, one inch wide at the centre, and tapering to sharp points at the ends. One end was buried $\frac{1}{2}$ inch in the brain. The velocity and force with which this chisel must have entered the brain may be imagined when it is stated that the drum to which it was attached was making 2,300 revolutions a minute. The injury to the brain was not discovered until several days afterward, and the man died at the tenth day.

The Fishery Question.

With reference to the reported interview in regard to the fishery question with Sir Lionel West, the British Ambassador at Washington, in New York recently, the impression prevails in official circles there that a mixed commission similar to the one which sat in Halifax in 1872 will be agreed upon, and that the fishery question, including such international difficulties as that involved in the headlands matters, will be settled forever.

How the Reporter Saved Him.

(Chicago Herald.)
"You may abuse newspaper men all you please," said a robust chap in the smoking room of a sleeping car, "but I want to tell you that I have a weakness for reporters.
A reporter once saved my life."
"How?"
"Well, three years ago I thought I was dying with consumption. My friends thought so too. It appeared to be a clear case."
"One day a reporter busted into my room, took out his pencil and notebook and began business without any unnecessary delay."
"Mr. Johnson," said he, "I understand that you are dying with consumption. Will you please give me a history of your life?"
"Well, gentlemen, but for that reporter I should not now be alive. I summoned all my remaining strength, threw the reporter down stairs, slid down the banister and jumped on him before he could get up, pounded him into a black swelling and then threw him into the street. An hour later I heard he was likely to die from his injuries, and so I took the first train for the west, going clear up into the mountains and roughing it like a prospector. Now, look at me!"
"Did the reporter die?"
"Not a bit of it. He's now the editor-in-chief of a paper in Cincinnati."

Relief of Burns.

It seems from a letter addressed by Mr.
Alex. G. Murdoch to the Glasgow Mail that Mr. John Bishop, of Pollock street, in that city, possesses a "haggis bowl," once belonging to the Burns family. The other relic is a well-preserved copy of the two-volume Edinburgh edition of his works, issued in 1793, which he presented to his natural daughter in Largieside, then a girl of ten years, and which bears the following autographic inscription:—"To Elizabeth Burns, from her father, the author." Mr.
Bishop, it seems, is a great-grandson of the poet. His grandmother was Elizabeth Burns, the identical "sonny, smirkin' dear-bought Bess" of the poet's "Inventory," written in answer to a mandate by the surveyor of taxes.

A Serious Oversight.

A correspondent writes from Cairns, Queensland, to the Tromboner as follows:
"England ought to make herself better acquainted with colonial wants, otherwise she will lose a great part of her colonial trade. America is pushing her hard in several lines, such as tools, agricultural implements, and rice machinery. A six horse power machine made in the United States of America can be bought for $900.
It is not perfect, for it breaks the rice too much. Let England step forward and make a perfect one, and get the trade, for there will be a great demand for rice machinery in Queensland. Our vehicles are nearly all built in the United States of America, sugar machinery from France, and steel rails from Germany. England cannot hold her own in saddlery; very few will buy an English saddle. You at home by your actions seem to think you know our requirements better than we do ourselves, but when you lose the trade you will not find it an easy matter to get it back again, and you will lose it if you do not alter your ways. It would pay your manufacturers to send out some intelligent persons to see what the colonials require."
