ELLEN'S DIARY

Farmlands Are Decked With Meadow-Flowers

With this morning's dawn, a brand new work-week was come — one as fresh and clean as is the page on which we now write — This, we must or must not do, we promised ourself of the forseeable tangibles and intangibles which daily "hedge us about."

We would, among other items slip now quietly from our pillow and while James was still abed — and the water in the porridge pot and the teakettle were heating — sew a patch on the rent knee of that other pair of his everyday trousers, so to send him off to his week neat-clad. We would, we said, when the petty cares of our days commenced to set a frown on our face instead of a smile, remember that because we live this day but once the fleeting hours should not be marred by any mean, selfish, ways.

"Might be a good day to start the hay. And then again it might not" Papa Starling observed when we set the clothes-basket down in the shade of the garage and began to spread pieces on the line nearby, against the morning's sun.

"It's a lovely day" she smiled brightly, coming to the door to shake a bit of lint from her dustcloth. "Why, there's not a cloud in the sky!" "I know" he nodded. "But the air is heavy and close."

And Alex, face against the bole of the great golden willow in the yard, counted aloud: "Five-ten-fifteen-twenty —" In an ageless and musical rhyme of children, as a pair of other lads, Brian a visiting cousin, a nice little chap, his senior by a few years, and Peter the three-past, of the family, scurried off to find convenient hiding places in the shrubbery or elsewhere about.

"Well, I wouldn't like to say whether or not to mow. The three-day forecast isn't too promising. But it could be astray. Though there were odd cobwebs on the grass this morning" we overheard James call from a piggery door to the younger farmer in the farmyard.

"I believe I'll go up and mow that pasture at the other place — just cut it and let it lie. The cutting will sweeten it — bring new growth for the cattle there. It's commencing to be rank, as it is."

"Well, please yourself" James said, taking in, in a long glance, sky and sun and field. "It may be more promising by then to get to real mowing."

In the little border, orange lillies bloomed for our pleasure. And the one girl of the place, picked a first-blown orangey rose, and arranging it with its satiny green foliage in a thin clear vase, made a bouquet of rare charm.

In a respite from his play this afternoon, Peter came by to perch on the old cupboard in the pantry not far from the bowl in which we were mixing cinnamon rolls to be a fresh bread, so to enjoy any incidentals of sweets that might fall to him.

"I believe I like better to see them mixed than to eat them after baking" he confided. "The raisins and brown sugar and cinnamon seems to have a nicer taste to them now" he smiled.

Enhance flavor, texture and color of casseroles by topping with almonds near the end of baking time. The almonds will toast to a golden brown in just a short time.

Mix vinegar and ammonia with water, pour into spray-top bottle for washing windows. Polish dry with a sheet of newspaper. Windows sparkle, there's no lint, no rags to wash.

Use cellophane tapes for emergency hem repairs.

A small nail makes a handy stopper for a tube of glue or household cement whose cap has been lost.

MARY HAWORTH

Woman Is Bored With Work Finances Necessitate Job

Dear Mary Haworth —What does a person do when she dislikes the type of work she does but isn't qualified for any other

I do office work and at times am so bored with this office that I could scream. I have been working for seven years and hating it for seven years. Yet I must work to supplement my husband's income and don't know how to do anything else.

There are other jobs I could try but they don't pay enough to be worthwhile if I am to help out at home, financially.

It seems obvious that I can't go back to school, not even to night classes, as there would be nobody to keep the children. My husband's job keeps him away three nights a week.

I have thought until I am almost crazy, trying to hit upon a way that I could just stay home. Lately I've been praying that either God would prepare the way for me to stay home, or that I would become adjusted to the office work and wouldn't mind doing it.

My prayers haven't been answered yet, but it occurred to me that you might have some suggestion. I know I sound selfish (that's what my husband calls me when I admit I hate working) but sometimes I can't help complaining to someone.— L.L.

Dear L.L.: The saint and martyr Sir Thomas More is said to have prayed the following prayer: "Those things, good Lord, that we pray for, give us Thy grace to labor for."

I have a fragmentary recollection, also of an old play ("Green Pastures," possibly) wherein one character challenges another, apropos the latter's bid to share in a windfall from heaven: "Has you been prayin'? or was you just wishin'?"

The point of the question was that those in the vicinity of the windfall who'd been praying were entitled to share in the shower of banknotes. Those who'd only been wishing were disqualified.

I wonder how many needful persons who might say they are praying really know the difference between praying and wishing.

Probably the proof of the difference is that bonafide prayer leads to meaningful action which actually changes things for the better Whereas wishing consists in merely wanting, waiting, hoping limply for something to turn up. ("Faith without works is dead," Scriptures tell us.)

In your situation, bonafide prayer would include, first, of all, a profound sense of gratitude for your blessings as is, among which is the job you have.

Despite your bitter distaste for this job, it is a special blessing at present for at least two reasons: first, because you need the income; second, because you are fortunate to have it, inasmuch as you don't (yet) qualify for a better one, in terms of disposition preparedness, etc.

Your attitude towards the job you have, and the spirit in which you do the work at hand, are profoundly influential in shaping your future in the job world.

As of now, your negativism towards your job and your can't-do spirit with respect to improving your basic education, tend powerfully to render you progressively undesirable to any employer, because of the kind of person you are becoming: namely, a thankless, whining, deadhead time-server.

If you would put yourself on the beam of congenial well paid employment by tomorrow, you must apply yourself with all your energies of mind and spirit to doing a radiantly efficient job where you are today.

Boredom is synonymous with apathy, and apathy with lack of involvement. In any office there is always plenty to do, for the person who has the imagination, interest, goodness and willingness to "brighten the corner" where he (or she) is. It boils down to a matter of character, more than training.

My advice is: straighten up and fly right on the job; and experiment with correspondence courses in higher education, if you can't take evening time away from the family at this season of your life.—M.H.

Vital Vitamins Vested In Fruits Of The Land

FRUIT is a must in a reducing diet because it furnishes vitamins and minerals that are otherwise often lacking, supplies fruit-sugar for energy and roughage to help intestinal action.

If you are struggling to attain a streamlined figure, eat fruit and plenty of it, before you eat anything else in a meal. The fruit is bulky and satisfying and makes it easier to eat fewer "fattening foods" Juice will not take its place because it is a liquid and passes more quickly out of the stomach.

IMPORTANT IN DIET

But reducing or not, few of us eat enough fresh fruit. It is important in the regular diet because it furnishes available material in the natural state, fruit acids that exert an alkalizing effect on the body. When the fruit is fully ripe, these elements are completely developed. So point number one in buying fruit is to select varieties that are really ripe and if possible, sun-ripened. Those that are artificially ripened in refrigerated cars or trucks do not contain the same relative quantity of vitamins as vine- or orchard-ripened fruits.

TOMORROW'S DINNER

Melon Wedges
Savory Ham Slices
Cornmeal Spoon Bread
Green Beans with Sliced Carrots
Peach-Nut-Cream Layer Cake
Hot or Iced Coffee or Tea Milk
Measurements level; recipes for 6

SAVORY HAM SLICES

Juice of 2 lemons
2 tsp. Worcestershire Sauce
2 tsp. sugar
1 tsp. powdered mustard
¼ tsp. each curry powder and paprika
2 tbsp. minced parsley
½ green pepper, minced
12 slices cold, boiled, boned ham

Thoroughly mix juice and seasonings; add parsley and green pepper.

Place layer of ham slices in deep plate; top with spoonful of seasoning mixture, then another slice of ham. Continue in this way until all ingredients are used.

Set aside for two hours to season or marinate. Baste ham twice with liquid in plate. Broil in medium heat until crisp at edges.

Remove ham; heat what remains of seasoning and pour hissing-hot over ham. Serve with cornmeal spoon bread or with dark bread, such as pumpernickel, if desired.

CORNMEAL SPOON BREAD

1½ cups boiling water
2 cups enriched cornmeal
1½ tsp. salt
2 tbsp. butter or margarine
2 good-sized eggs
1¼ cups milk
2 tsp. double-acting baking powder

Stir boiling water into cornmeal until mixture is consistency of thick mush with no lumps. Add salt; stir in butter.

Beat eggs light; add milk. Stir into first mixture with baking powder. Beat thoroughly.

Turn into well-buttered low qt. baking dish, or into 6 individual low casseroles. Bake 35 to 40 minutes in moderate oven 350 degrees or until slightly puffed, brown and firm to touch.

PEACH-NUT-CREAM FILLING

(For use in filling a 2 or 3-Layer Sponge or White Cake, Homemade or From a Mix)

1 cup heavy cream
¾ cup powdered sugar (no lumps)
¾ cup mashed, peeled ripe peaches
¾ cup chopped toasted al-

monds, or pecans or pistachio nuts

Whip cream, gradually beating in sugar; when almost stiff and peaks begin to form, beat in peaches and fold in nuts.

Spread between layers and on top of cake ½ hour before serving and refrigerate.

If cake is to be kept longer, add a little gelatine to the cream for peach-nut filling while whipping. Combine 1 tsp unflavored gelatine with 1 tsp. water or milk. Dissolve over hot water; beat into cream to give sufficient consistency to hold filling together without it becoming stiff.
