CHANGING CONDITIONS.

ADVICES from Great Britain show that commercial observers there have been considerably scared over the giant strides recently made by the Great Republic in respect to the export of manufactured products. It appears that in 1898 the United States exported to outside markets, including that of Great Britain herself, manufactured products to the value of $290,697,354; in 1899 the value of this class of exports rose to $338,675,658; in 1900 they shot up to $432,284,366. The latter amount is equivalent to about 40 per cent. of Britain's exports for the same period, and the rate of progress is, to the manufacturers of Great Britain, terrific. It is evident, at all events, that protection has not been proved to be a failure in the case of the United States, and that Free Trade Britons will have to "do something" if they are to hold their own against a hostile commercial world. A few of the more influential journals such as The Spectator are even now calling for a tariff of 5 to 10 per cent. on manufactured foreign products. Some of these plead that the existing sources of revenue are inadequate. The cost of the South African war, the cost of naval improvements required, the expenditure necessary to keep the Empire in a state of defence—these are the causes which they adduced as necessitating the fiscal change they suggest. It is evident, at all events, that the changing conditions of Great Britain's commerce are producing changes in the mind of Great Britain's thinkers. What the outcome will be is not yet apparent. But we should not be greatly surprised to see, ere long, an Imperial Trade Union as against commercially hostile foreign nations.

A MODERN INSTANCE.

The Pioneer says: "Mr. Daniel Gallant, of Fifteen Point, left Summerside last Tuesday evening to drive home. After leaving Miscouche he went to sleep at the hotel, with the understanding that the old horse would take him home, as he had often done in the past—but it inevitably takes at least one exception to prove the rule. A searching party next morning found the horse, somewhat cut, though the driver had been entangled in the fence. It was then reported that Mr. Gallant's body would probably not be recovered until the snow melted in the proverbial January thaw. A later report was to the effect that the body had been discovered under a heavy snow drift and that the obsequies would follow in due course. We are pleased to report, however, that Mr. Gallant is making a good recovery from his terrible exposure, having been found the following afternoon in a field, numb with the cold and almost at the point of death."

This is one of the latest evidences of our government's success in enforcing the Canada Temperance Act.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

MR. WILSON who boasted a few days ago that the liquor dealers gave 200,000 votes to the Laurier Government (in return for the plebiscite folly) has been re-elected President of the Licensed Victuallers Association. The next good turn he deserves is an honor from the Government for which he has done so much.

A STICKLER complains that the newspapers continually pin the title of "Hon." to all ex-members of Provincial Governments. Of course, these gentlemen are not entitled to the "Honorable" designation. But the papers as well as the people have a weakness for titles. While we hope that Canada will never become as title-mad as the Great Republic, there seems to be no great objection to the courtesy which assumes that a man once "honorable" is always "honorable."

ONE of the leading newspapers of Japan says: "We Japanese should derive a lesson from the stories of Russian barbarity. We sincerely hope that no such untoward event will come to pass, but we must always be prepared for a conflict with Russia. None can positively say that a Russian war is a nightmare of the weak. Who knows? It may occur at any time. If it really occurs, we Japanese, one and all, must prepare ourselves to conquer or die. It is far better for us to perish as a nation by our own hands than to be tortured and then slaughtered in a wholesale manner by our savage enemy." The gentle Japanese are evidently looking to the future and preparing for it.

THE temperance cause, in Paris, has lost a unit. In the Rue du Temple, a few days ago, a jeweler, who was since some months "on the fence" respecting resigning all drinks, was opening his shop in the morning, when he observed several of his trinkets of a value of 900 francs, and that were placed in a small black bag, had disappeared. He fastened the broken shop door, and went to tell his misfortune to the magistrate. But he entered a side street in order to get there quickly, while, in order to drown his grief, or to get courage, he dropped into a low public-house for a glass of beer. What was his astonishment on beholding his black bag on the counter, and a man offering the trinkets almost for nothing. He declined to buy, slipped quietly out of the shop, secured two policemen, returned to the public-house, had the man with the bag arrested, and nearly all his trinkets safe. Unfortunately in the evening he had more glasses with some neighbors, and got home much the worse for drink.

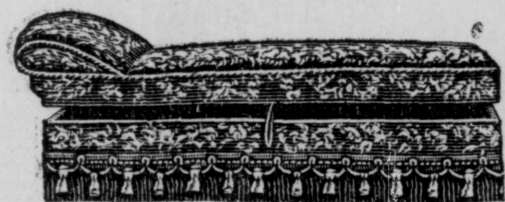

THE New York World publishes a stale story to the effect that much anxiety prevails in the British court circles respecting the Queen's health. It is said that she has broken down noticeably since she was informed that the Empress Frederick was suffering from cancer of the throat and could not live many months. She has lost her appetite and passes sleepless nights. A belief undoubtedly prevails among those around her that the Queen is at least failing. One of them says: "Although ordered to get everything in readiness to move to Osborne on the twentieth, the arrangements may be countermanded at the last moment."

JAMES PATON & COMPANY.

Everything is uncertain, owing to her majesty's state of health. This talk about her going to Cimiez is the wildest speculation. It is unsafe to prophecy her movements or condition a week ahead." The papers in London assert that the Queen is in her usual health. She was evidently so a few days ago when she reviewed the Canadian contingent and received the officers.

At the Twentieth Century Club a Boston a few evenings ago. Mr. Ernest Ingham, of England, made every strong address opposed to the present foreign policy of England and America. The subject of his address was "The White Man's Burden"—the most important part of the burden of duty being to mind his own business! He advanced the idea that the method pursued by England in the subjugation of India, Egypt, South Africa, and by the United States of the Philippines, is opposed to the best interests of the race from every point of view—that it is a retrograde movement to the despotism of the days of the Roman Empire rather than an advance to meet the ethical ideals of the present. He spoke in favor of the dependence and inter-dependence of nations, held that no nation has the right to hold herself aloof from intercourse with others, as China has done, nor to force her policy or her religion on another, as England has done. He did not decry missions, but held that a missionary should go among nations at his own risk, not trusting in his government for protection, nor calling on it to avenge him if the heathen resented his interference. The same considerations which control individuals in their relations with each other should, he contended, control nations. An individual has no right to arrest a disorderly or criminal person in the street—he has only the right to summon a policeman; so no nation has the right to summarily punish another for crimes fancied or genuine. Of course he didn't speak about the invasion of British territory in South Africa by the Boers or the refusal of the Kruger government to keep terms with the British. That is another view of the case.
