

SPLIT DEEPENS IN STRIKING DOCK UNION IN BRITAIN; SEAMEN END 26-DAY TIEUP

LONDON (Reuters) - The plight of Russian seamen now in Britain to defend three major trophies they won at last year's Henley Royal regatta has moved striking British stevedores to call a temporary truce.

The strikers have agreed to unload the Russians' racing shells, which have been held up for days in the hold of the Russian ship Strelina. Given a special priority by London port authorities, the vessel moved Sunday from her Thames river anchorage to a dock where volunteer stevedores will unload the shells today.

But though the strikers have unburdened briefly in the cause of sport, the stoppage goes on with a deepened split among the 19,000 members of the striking union—the National Amalgamated Stevedores and Dockers.

Strikers from Liverpool and Manchester plan to march on the capital today for demonstrations at the docks.

Britain's other maritime dispute—a 26-day wildcat seamen's strike—petered out Saturday as the disgruntled and financially-handicapped sailors voted at Liverpool and Southampton to end their walkout.

They go back today to several trans-Atlantic liners still penned up in the two ports. The strike was over their demands for better conditions aboard ship.

CONCILIATORY TONE

The U.S. had announced earlier that the plane was attacked by two Russian MIG jet fighters over international waters between Alaska and Siberia. It crashed and burned on St. Lawrence island in the Bering sea. Seven of the 11 crew members were injured.

The conciliatory tone of statements by Dulles and Molotov apparently ended any danger that the aerial incident might in some manner disrupt plans for the Big Four conference at Geneva July 15.

The Russian note insisted the United States navy Neptune patrol plane had "violated the state's frontier of the Soviet Union in the region of the Bering straits" and that this was the reason for the shooting. The United States has insisted the plane was over international waters when Russian MIG jet fighters attacked without provocation.

REGRET IS GRATIFYING

Dulles was asked what he thought of the Soviet response to his demand on Molotov Friday for an explanation of the shooting. "It is gratifying," Dulles said.

CLAIM OVER SOVIET SOIL

The note from Molotov said Russia had advised the United States in the past to issue orders making such "undesirable incidents" impossible. The fact that the American plane got over into the Soviet area, the note claimed, was evidence the United States had not taken "the necessary measures."

The state department reiterated Sunday it found "no possibility of error" as to location of the navy plane.

Molotov Is Spokesman

Russia Regrets Shooting Incident

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Soviet Foreign Minister V. M. Molotov expressed regret Saturday for the shooting down of an American naval plane in the Bering straits last Wednesday and said Russia is willing to pay half the damages.

The Soviet foreign minister, attending the 10th anniversary conference of the United Nations here, disclosed the Russian position in a memorandum handed to State Secretary Dulles at a hurriedly-arranged meeting.

In Washington Sunday Dulles said he is gratified at Russia's official expression of regret for the shooting down of the plane.

Maintains No Foulup In N. S.-Nfld. Ferry Service

OTTAWA (CP) — A senior government official maintained Saturday there has been no foulup in the soon-to-start car ferry service between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland.

It came to light Friday that the new motor vehicle ferry William Carson, built to ply the 125 miles between North Sydney, N. S., and Port Aux Basques, Nfld., cannot use the route now because the Port Aux Basques channel is two feet too shallow.

A works department official said it will require two years to dredge the channel and build a breakwater so that the 320-foot-long, $6,000,000 ferry can use Port Aux Basques harbor, at the southwest tip of Newfoundland.
