Forecast Record Peacetime Deficit In Ottawa Budget

By HAROLD MORRISON Canadian Press Staff Writer OTTAWA (CP) — The government will present Parliament with a budget next month featuring the greatest peacetime deficit in history, it was learned authoritatively Tuesday.

There is no talk in federal quarters of any major tax cuts. But even so, current forecasts place the 1958-59 deficit at between $600,000,000 and $750,000,000. Some authorities believe it may go even higher.

The deficit, which will mean a rising national debt and stepped-up federal borrowing from the money market, would result from virtually stationary revenues and record expenditures of perhaps as much as $6,000,000,000.

First indication of the size of federal spending will come soon after the 24th Parliament is opened Monday. The book of estimated expenditures for the fiscal year that began April 1 likely will be presented within two or three days after MPs assemble.

SUPPLY RUNS OUT The reason is that the government's current supply of funds — obtained through governor-general's warrants — runs out May 15. To get new supply — this time voted by Parliament — the government must first present its estimates of expenditures on which to base its request for funds.

Supplementary estimates will be added later covering various decisions of Parliament reached during the course of its deliberations. One of these supplementaries may deal with federal payments to provinces under the national hospital insurance scheme. Bookkeeping on the government's spending during the last fiscal year ended March 31 has not yet been completed. But the indications are that the outlays — including those for old age pensions — came to about $5,500,000,000.

Now the government is opening its purse to greater outlays on public works of various kinds to counter the impact of recession and the indications are that the total bill may push spending perhaps to $5,800,000,000 or $6,000,000,000.

INTO THE RED INK However, revenues are not expected to keep pace and the government will go deep into the red. A deficit of between $600,000,000 and $750,000,000 would be the largest since the annual wartime deficits of more than $2,000,000,000 in the years of 1943-46.

The national debt rose to a record $13,400,000,000 in 1946. But eight consecutive post-war surpluses chopped the debt to some $11,000,000,000 by March 1956.

Finance Minister Fleming predicted an $80,000,000 surplus for the last fiscal year, though the figures which will be produced when the new budget is presented may be — what below that. There may — on be a tiny deficit.

But because of the size of the budget and the smallness of the expected balance — either in the red or in the black — authorities feel they can safely describe 1957-58 as the year of the balanced budget.

NOT TOO CONCERNED They seem none too concerned over the likely size of the current-year deficit. The previous biggest peacetime deficit occurred in the depression year of 1933 when the administration went into the red by $221,000,000.

There was a larger one of $390,000,000 in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1920, but that was a spill-over from the First World War. The biggest in recent years was one of $142,000,000 in 1955. The last one, $17,000,000, was in 1956.

Devoted His Life To Bringing Daylight To People

By DENNIS NEEDL LONDON (AP) — All his life, life, William Willett carried on a love affair with daylight.

A millionaire builder of mansions, Willett always instructed his designers and foremen: "Windows require great attention so as to obtain all the light possible."

But his great crusade, carried on against scorn and ridicule, was for daylight saving.

He died in 1915, a disappointed man, little dreaming that within a year his plan would be adopted in Britain and eventually would spread around the world.

Willett was approaching 50 when his great idea hit him. An early riser, he daily swung out of bed at 6:30 to go riding through the pretty Petis Wood near his country home at Chislehurst, outside London.

HITS ON PLAN It was May, 1906. The sun was streaming through the trees, yet none of it penetrated the blinds on the windows of houses Willett passed on his ride. The birds and animals were awake, but man snored on, a slave to his recently perfected alarm clock.

Man's clock, he reasoned, should be his servant, not his master.

Slowly the details of his plan began to form. Put the clock back and forward according to the seasons, sleep in darkness, take advantage of the extra hours of summer daylight.

In 1907 he published a four-page penny booklet, The Waste of Daylight. It ran to 19 editions and eventually grew to 60 pages. It was translated into half a dozen languages.

"Everyone appreciates the long light evenings," Willett wrote. "Everyone laments their shrinking as autumn approaches. Now if some of the hours of wasted sunlight in spring, summer and autumn could be withdrawn from the beginning and added to the end of the day, many advantages would be gained by all."

CONVERSATIONAL TOPIC Willett sent his pamphlet to members of the Houses of Lords and Commons. Soon daylight saving was as controversial a subject as votes for women.

A daylight saving bill reached

Parliament in 1908 but was referred to a committee and effectively buried. A similar fate befell the measure when it was reintroduced in 1909 and 1911.

Meanwhile, Willett had gained some support. A rising young Briton named Winston Churchill predicted that some day a grateful nation would erect a statue to Willett and lay sunflowers at his feet on the longest day of the year.

His village of Chislehurst in Kent adopted the scheme, and meetings were held throughout the country to support it.

Then, in 1914, came war. Even Willett abandoned his campaign. When he died at 58 on March 4, 1915, he had given up all hope.

WAR HELPED IT But ironically, it was the war that finally brought his plan success. Britain was plagued by a coal shortage, and leaders finally realized that longer hours of daylight would save fuel.

The bill passed by 170 votes to 2 and daylight saving first became effective May 17, 1916. But there still was opposition. The 200 residents of Ebernoe in Sussex refused to adopt the new time, contending that Greenwich mean time was ordained by God and it was a sin to change the clocks.

No statue to Willett was erected, but Churchill later wrote:

"He has the monument he would have wished in the thousands of playing fields crowded with eager young people every fine evening throughout the summer, and one of the finest epitaphs that any man could wish — he gave more light to his countrymen."
