A TOUCH OF NATURE.

(Concluded)

Here the wrinkled hands stopped laying stones, and when Carroll looked up, one was holding the worn handkerchief under the old bonnet, while the other pressed hard against the poor, palpitating heart.

'Well, my dear woman,' he made out to say, 'your lot has been a hard one, and I am sorry for you, indeed, I am. May I ask if you live near here now?'

'Not now, sir,' she answered as soon as she was able to proceed. 'I nurse some in the city. I could ill afford the time or money to come here now, but I so longed to, and lately I thought so much about them, I had to come!'

'Then you came here this morning?'

'Yes, Sir; by the four o'clock train. 'So early, and do I understand you leave soon?'

'I promised to be back on the next train. 'It seems a pity,' said Carroll, with feeling, 'that you should be denied even the privilege of visiting the graves of your family.'

'Yes, sir; still I have much to be thankful for. It is a great pleasure to be able to come here for a few hours even, to look on them and fix them up a little. Then there is my daughter, away out in California; she is married now, and just getting a nice little home. She wrote me. So some day, though I can barely pay my way just now, I hope by saving all I can, to see her again.'

As Carroll looked at the frail form, he wondered how she could hope even to pay her way much longer.

'Pardon me,' he said, after thinking a moment. 'May I ask if you have much laid by for such a purpose?'

'Oh, not much; I don't know exactly how much. You see, I am unable to work long at a time. I hoped to have twenty dollars left when I got back, but let me see: the fare was a little more than I had expected, and then the coffee. I did not intend to get that, but somehow as I got nearer I felt faint-like—and well that cost me a quarter. Still it helped me—helped me a good deal. Well let me see, she said again, and pulling out the old silk handkerchief, she untied from one corner a few small bills and some change. Slowly she counted each piece and laid it carefully by itself.

'Yes, that's all. I did think it was a dollar or so more, but that certainly is all, twenty dollars and sixty-five cents. Well, I don't know; perhaps I shall never go, but it helps me to think I may, some time.'

'How much do you think it would cost you?' asked Carroll.

'Oh, I don't know. I never dared to ask for fear it was a good deal. Sometimes I have thought, perhaps sixty dollars. Do you think 'twould cost much more?'

Carroll asked her the exact station she would leave, and the one to which she would go. Then he thought a little, and looked up. The faded eyes were so expectant, so mixed with a far off hopefulness, that he could not find courage to say one hundred dollars. She watched him closely for a few seconds; then, as if half afraid to speak, asked if it would be very much more.

'Well, I will tell you,' said Carroll reluctantly. 'I find first-class fares with good meals all the way—that makes it a little larger, of course—will cost you about one hundred dollars.'

The flat bosom raised quickly as he spoke, and as it sank slowly back a resigned but inexpressible sad look took the place of the hopeful one. Before she could speak Carroll went on:

'Now, I will run it up again on a cheaper plan.'

He turned around a little, and again opened his book. Two bills were there, his last month's pay, just one hundred and fifty dollars.

Why shouldn't he? He had never given much to anything. Many a man gave that amount to a church or minister, and thought little of it. He hesitated but an instant, then tearing a leaf from the book, wrote:

'This money I shall never miss. Take it and go to your daughter. Please do not ask me to take it back, or ever try to pay it. I can sympathize with you, for I, too, have watched by the dying. The very morning your husband fell at Shiloh, my only brother was shot there, under the other flag.'

'Yours in sympathy,
'JAMES CARROLL.'

Into this he put the money, and rolled it carefully,

'Here are the figures,' he said, turning to her; 'all down plain, so you can make no mistake. It will cost you much less, I find, than we first supposed. Please do not take time to look over them till you are on the train.'

'Thank you, sir. 'Twill be a sort of comfort to know just how much it will cost, though, since you spoke, I fear I shall never go.'

'But perhaps you may. Sometimes things are in store for us that we least expect. I shall have to go now. Good-by, and may God bless you.'

As he passed the edge of the trees, Carroll could not resist the temptation to look back.

She stood as he left her, looking down at the smallest grave. After that she put the paper away carefully, and walked slowly around the graves, one after the other; then for a moment leaned on the solitary stone. He saw her take out the old handkerchief and pass it over her eyes for a moment. Then she turned away, and her tottering steps disappeared among the pines.

Some six weeks after this, as Carroll glanced over the pile of mail left at his tent, a small white envelope, postmarked at a town in Southern California, took his attention.

As he eagerly opened it, he noticed the writing inside was less cramped and even than on the wrapper:—

'Dear unknown friend,' it began, 'can I ever thank you enough for your kindness to my poor old mother! Four short weeks ago she came here, with a heart overflowing with gratitude to you for helping her to come. Though we then fondly hoped she might be with us for years, to day she is gone. One joyous week of seeming health, and then almost before we knew it she began to fail rapidly. We did all that could be done, but nothing would help her, and yesterday, with her head resting in my arms, talking of you and my father, she quietly breathed her last.'

'You will never know how badly we felt when we found she had to go, nor how thankful we were that she came to us to die. She seemed perfectly happy from the moment she reached us to the last. She held the baby as long as her strength would permit, and after that we kept it near her. When she found she could not live it did not change her at all. She only seemed the happier to think she came, and more grateful to you for helping her.'

'The morning after she was taken ill, she directed this envelope, but finding she had not strength to write, asked me to be sure and let you know she came, and thank you for your kindness.'

'To-morrow we shall lay her in the little graveyard close by. We enclose a draft for what was left of your kind gift, and believe us, we deeply appreciate and thank you for it. Hoping God will bless you more than money or our poor thanks can, we are, most gratefully yours,

'PAUL AND MARY BROWNFIELD.'

'Indeed,' said James Carroll, as he brushed a few damp spots from the writing, 'and are we not all one family now?'

Boston Markets.

BOSTON, Oct. 7.

EGGS.—There has been a fair demand with no important changes in prices, though the tendency is to higher rates. Sales of Eastern extras at 22 to 22½, New York and Vermont 21 to 21½, and Island mostly at 21c per dozen. We quote: P. E. Island 20½ to 21c.

POTATOES, &c.—There is a liberal supply of potatoes, and prices are easier. Aroostook Hebrons command 53c, but it is hard to get over 48c for the best Eastern Rose and Northern Rose 35 to 40c. Prolifics will not bring over 40c.

FISH.—Mackerel have been in very light receipt the past three days, both here and at outports, and prices are firm. The weather has been unfavorable for the fleet, and very few Mackerel have been caught for nearly a week. Sales at outports at $6.50 per brl., without brl. Late caught Shore No. 3 are firmly held at $5 per brl., and further sales have been made at that price. No. 2 are in liberal receipt, and rule at $7 and $8 per brl. No. 1 continue scarce, and large lots are firm at $18 and $20 per barrel. Not much doing in Nova Scotia or P. E. Island Mackerel, and prices are without change. The Halifax steamer brought about 1,100 barrels of all kinds. Dry Bank Codfish have been in liberal supply, and sales of about 3,000 qtls, have been made at $2.87½ per qtl. for large. As most of the floating stock has been disposed of, the market is steadier, but dealers are well supplied and it will be difficult to get any higher prices until there is a better trade. Pickle cured Bank are steady at $3 for large and $2.50 per qtl. for medium. Shore Codfish range from $3.50 to $4 per qtl, as to quality. Hake are in fair demand at $2 to $2.25 per qtl. Haddock have been selling at $1.75 to $2, and Pollock at $1.75 to $2 per qtl. Pickled Herring move rather slowly, but prices are fairly maintained.

NOTES.

Not the promissory, but facts about WELCOME SOAP, an article that does not contain one particle of the adulterations used to reduce the cost of 'Pure Goods,' but does possess the value of legitimate Washing Qualities, the demand for which proves the advantage gained by the use of the genuine over Soaps of doubtful character. None should be deceived even by Red and Yellow Wrappers, or any of the imitations of the WELCOME, as a pair of clasped hands is stamped on every bar. Made by CURTIS, DAVIS & Co.

A CARD.—To all who are suffering from errors and indiscretions of youth, nervous weakness, early decay, loss of manhood, &c. I will send a recipe that will cure you, FREE OF CHARGE. This great remedy was discovered by a missionary in South American send self-addressed envelope to Rev. Joseph T. Inman, Station D, New York.

VELVETEENS.—Very popular with ladies as Dress Material. We are showing a full assortment in Black and the new colors such as are now worn in London and Paris.—WEEKS & Co., Market Square. oct6
