Canadian Club Formed In Massachusetts

Dr. George S. Patterson, Consul General of Canada in Boston, was the guest speaker at the first banquet of the newly-organized Canadian Club in Framingham, Mass., which took place at the Kendall Hotel.

Dr. Patterson is a native of Moncton, N. B., a graduate of Mt. Allison University, The Union Theological Seminary, and he received his Ph. D. degree at Columbia. His career and experiences have been such that at times his assignments were difficult, even hazardous.

Having served seven years as General Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. at Toronto, he joined the Department of External Affairs of Canada for appointment to the Canadian Embassy in Chungking where he served for two years as Counselor charge d'Affairs. He returned to Ottawa, then back to China again in 1947, where he was stationed in Banking, and from 1949 to 1952 he served as Consul General at Shanghai, from where he came to Boston.

Dr. Patterson, while in the Department of External Affairs of Canada, has taken part in various conferences and missions, the Canadian Liaison mission to Tokyo, the Far Eastern Commission of Washington, U. N. Commission of Korea in Seoul and New York, U. N. General Assembly at Paris. As Consul General at Boston, Dr. Patterson represents Canada in five New England States. He and his staff are active in fostering good-will, trade and cultural relations.

Other guests at the turkey dinner banquet included Rev. John Harris of St. Andrews Episcopal Church, who gave an opening prayer, Rev. James Lambert of the Marist Seminary, who gave the closing prayer and Selectman Norman Hartnell, who extended greetings of the Town.

Entertainment for the evening was provided by the Framingham State Teachers' College chapel choir under the direction of Prof. Edward F. Gilday, followed by Group songs and "The Maple Leaf Forever," with Mrs. Vera Littlefield at the piano. Toast master for the program was Victor Foster.

During the evening president John E. Logan of Natick, formerly of Halifax, N. S., spoke of the club in general and explained the requirements for membership. Most of the towns in the area are represented with the exception of Boston which has its own Canadian Club. Almost every town or place in the three Maritime provinces is represented as well as several towns in Quebec, Ottawa and other parts of Ontario and Newfoundland.

The Canadian Club of Framingham was recently organized by Bertha Howatt, formerly of Cape Traverse, Prince Edward Island, assisted by Attorney Pierre Bellevue, Secretary of the Canadian Club in Boston and formerly of Dorchester, N. B. The purpose of the club is to promote good-will between Canada and the United States, fellowship and social activities, and historical, artistic and literary activities within the Club.

A hearty vote of thanks and appreciation was extended to Mrs. Howatt for the splendid work achieved. Mrs. Bellevue was presented with a bouquet of flowers at the close of the program.

CHAPTER XIV

Continued

He was living in Strang's bungalow while the Residency was being made habitable, and as the trader was out for most of the day superintending the work on the plantation, he enjoyed a lazy, quiet life to the full after his recent privations.

He read a good deal, he played the gramophone, and he took an occasional stroll round the settlement in order to gain a general impression of its character.

As far as the physical appearance of the latter was concerned, he found that it differed little from other native villages he had known; but from the first he was struck by the unusually subdued bearing of its inhabitants. In his previous experience of Kanakas, he had always found them an indolent, cheerful and pleasure-loving folk, but here they seemed to have reversed all these racial characteristics.

Certainly they were far from indolent, for all of them—even to the small children—seemed to spend most of their waking hours in work of one kind or another. But equally certainly they appeared to reap none of the proverbially associated with honest toil, for their general demeanour was decidedly gloomy.

It was not altogether a pleasing phenomenon, but he thought little about it at the time; though it was to give him food for thought later.

ant, for in Strang's company he had to keep up the pretence of lost memory, which he could afford to do during the day. This was no easy matter in itself, and at first it was, rendered less easy by the trader's lavish notions of hospitality in the matter of drink.

It appeared that Strang indulged himself pretty heavily, and he tried to induce his guests to follow his example; but with the fear of giving himself away constantly in his mind Thurlow dared not respond to his genial invitation, and the trader took his refusal with no very good grace.

"Why, what's the matter?" he demanded. "What are you scared of?"

"Nothing," Thurlow responded untruthfully. "But I fancy I must have been fairly abstemious in the past, for I find I don't care for it much."

"Oh, nonsense!" Strang exclaimed. "You put away your share when the others were here didn't you? Come on, man! There's little else to do here in the evenings you'll find!"

He was inclined to be sulky when Thurlow stuck to his point, and returned to the attack on subsequent evenings. After the third attempt, however, he gave it up, and to Thurlow's considerable surprise dropped his own heavy potatoes. He grumblingly declared that there was no fun in drinking alone, but it struck Thurlow as remarkable that he should be able thus easily to discontinue a vice which on his own showing had become habitual with him. In other respects he made himself pleasant enough, though Thurlow fancied that he detected a certain wariness behind his increased his own tendency upon general topics, and he was really interesting when he spoke of his early days on the island, when both he and Porson were new to the conditions and had had a hard time in overcoming native prejudices and combating the various hostile elements.

Every time Thurlow brought up the subject of present day affairs on Arafu, however, he proved somewhat evasive.

"There's nothing to it now," he remarked on one occasion. "Once you get the hang of it you'll find that the show practically runs itself. But we can go into all that later. Let's leave it till you're rested up and are feeling good and fit again."

Actually, Thurlow was feeling as fit as ever, he had felt in his life, but he required little encouragement to put off the time when he would have to take up his unknown duties in earnest, and he let the subject drop without demur.

Paper Advertising Said Most Effective

Toronto, May 12 —(CP)—Howard S. Mark, vice-president of the Robert Simpson Company, said recently newspaper advertising has no substitute for effectiveness.

Speaking during a forum discussing direct mail advertising at the 48th annual convention of the Association of Canadian Advertisers, he said that, while newspapers are advertising's "big guns," direct mail is only the "rifle fire."

He added: "Any merchant who depends upon direct mail when he should be using newspaper advertising will surely lose sales, if not his shirt."

"We at Simpson's believe, with all of you I am sure, that there is no substitute for the daily newspapers."
