LOSING TO WIN.

A Story of Honor and Love.

BY A. MAYNAIRD BARBOUR. (Concluded.)

As Marion took her place that morning in the choir at St. Paul's, Raymond

Demmon, seated among the congregation, saw once more the form he loved so well, moving with the same quick grace as of old; he saw the same fair face, but sweeter and lovelier than ever before; then a mist came over his vision, and for a moment he could see no more.

Marion, unconscious of his presence, unacquainted with the name of the entire congregation, conscious only of the eternal sunshine that seemed to envelope her, felt that she could sing at that moment as she had never sung before.

Above the other voices hers rang out, in the opening words of the old anthem, "Aris, Shine, for Thy Light is Come"; and when she ceased her solo her voice filled the church with its sweetness and power, and there was a note of triumph in it that thrilled her listeners.

"Thy sun shall no more go down, Neither shall thy moon withdraw itself; For the Lord shall be thine everlasting light,

And the days of thy mourning shall be ended."

Not until near the close of the service did Marion see Raymond in the crowded congregation, but that glance of mutual recognition brought a new radiance to her eyes, and an added color to her cheeks, making her lovelier than ever.

Raymond extended himself to his friend, and Marion, on coming out, was not surprised to find him waiting; and, looking up into his shining eyes, she knew that he had come to claim his own.

When Raymond left Silvertown on the following day he had Marion's promise that his next trip East she would accompany him; and he had promised to return with him at once, but Marion had shown him how impracticable such a course would be, and had promised to be ready to go with him a few weeks; to this he consented, remembering the business to be transacted on this trip, and the money ready because of a certain plan which, within the last twenty-four hours, had been maturing in his mind, but of which he said nothing.

At Chicago business was soon satisfactorily settled with the Western company with which he had been associated, and then, going East, he completed arrangements with the new company with which he was to be connected in the future. He was not expected to enter on active duty until November first, which gave him ample time for his own personal plans, and for about three weeks his time seemed to be fully occupied at Irvington.

September had yielded the scepter to October, the most royal month of the whole year. The mountains had donned their snowy caps, imparting a delicious crispness to the air, and the lower ranges and foothills had wrapped themselves in a purple haze, which softened their rugged outlines, the flowers had put on their richest hues, and the trees waved their brighter tints in the golden sunlight, when Raymond Demmon returned to Silvertown to claim his bride.

On one of those joyous October mornings there was a wedding at St. Paul's. Loving friends had trimmed the church with vines and flowers. The delicate smiles joined hands with his daintier mountain cousins to form a beautiful bow, over which hung a bell of white roses; and there the fair, young queen of Riverside and the sweet singer had brought gladness to so many sorrowing hearts in the Western mining towns, became a happy bride.

Mr. and Mrs. Demmon started at once for the East. When they at last reached Irvington, many of Marion's former friends, among them the directors of the Irvington National Bank, were at the depot to welcome her to her old home, and to tender their congratulations and kind wishes.

But what most surprised her was to see the old coachman from Riverside waiting with a carriage, to receive them.

"Why, there is James!" she exclaimed to Raymond. "How does he come to be here?"

"Oh," said Raymond merrily, "James made me promise when I left that he should have the pleasure of bringing home the bride."

As the carriage rolled along the familiar road, and as Riverside came into view, Raymond watched Marion closely, to see if the old-time memories would bring any shadow over that fair face, but they did not. Turning toward him, she suddenly asked—

"Raymond, does Mr. Templeton still own Riverside?"

"I believe not," he answered; "when I was here he had become so deeply involved that he was obliged to sell it, and there was some talk of selling it at auction, I believe," he added, slowly, "that the place is empty now."

"The old home!" said Marion pityingly. "To be tossed about at auction from one bidder to another!"

A few moments afterward, to her astonishment, the horses, instead of keeping the road to the Demmon home, turned into the broad, gravelled drive of Riverside. "How does your husband in the wilderness?" Raymond's husband inquired, "what does this mean?"

"I thought, dear," he replied, "that possibly you might like to take a look at your old home."

"But, Raymond, only see! everything looks so familiar as if I had left it only yesterday. I do not understand how it can be."

In silence they passed under the old elm trees; Marion's hammock swung there as on that day, so long ago, when the doors were open, and on the verandas the summer chairs, the willow rockers and the rugs were arranged the same as that day, so long ago, when Marion and Raymond walked up together from the harvest fields. As she alighted from the carriage, Raymond's mother and the old housekeeper came out to receive her, and Marquis, with a bay of delight that could have been heard for miles bounded down the steps to add his demonstrations of welcome.

Speechless with astonishment, Marion turned to Raymond once more.

Raymond stepped to a table, and, taking from it a large envelope, placed it in her hands, saying—

"This is my wedding gift to you, my love. It has a story to tell."

She opened it and found a deed of Riverside intact, from Raymond Demmon to his wife.

Marion Bainbridge Demmon.

With one glad cry, Marion let the papers slip to the floor, and, throwing her arms about her husband's neck, she burst into tears. Very gently he soothed her, and told her how that having found her at Silvertown, and knowing that Riverside was for sale, he had hastened home, determined to buy it at any price and of his happiness in preparing it as a wedding gift for her.

"But, Raymond," questioned Marion, "how is it that everything looks so familiar, and my room is just as it used to be? Even my books and my work are here?"

"My darling," said Raymond, "when you left us so suddenly on that sad day, so long ago, I loved you; I believed that you would return, and that some time I would find you and win you. Knowing the articles in your old home that were your special favorites, I brought them at the sale a few days after, thinking that some time you would prize them and enjoy them in the home that we would have together, and I have had them stored all these years, waiting till I should find you."

"Oh, Raymond, how true and unselfish and patient your love for me has been! But how could you remember to arrange everything so perfectly, just as it used to be?"

"My dear Raymond, the events of that last time when I saw you were impressed on my mind with such distinctness that I could almost recall every detail of this room as clearly as if it had been photographed; so it was very easy for me to reproduce it."

Silently they walked together to the window, and looked out upon the beautiful scene the same one upon which Marion had gazed with such anguish a few years before. At last Marion murmured—

"Dear old home! Raymond, what a story it could tell if it could only speak!"

"Indeed, it could," replied Raymond, "a story of love's sacrifice." To which Marion added, with shining eyes, "And of love's compensation."

THE ONLY HELP.

A Victim of Bright's Disease for Many Years Cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

NEEPAWA (Special) June 29.—Mrs. T. H. McKee formerly of Lissetel, came here as a last resort. Had suffered ten years with Bright's disease. Reported to be past help and dying, her reappearance on the street in apparent good health, was a pleasant surprise.

The explanation given was that her little boy had insisted that she should use Dodd's Kidney Pills and prophesied that they would cure her. She says: "After the first few doses I began to feel better, and after taking four and a half boxes, I say it with heart I feel gratified, I am perfectly cured." Dodd's Kidney Pills are the only medicine in the world that has ever cured a case of Bright's Disease at such a stage.

Bad Blood Between Them

The ever-slaving farmer's wife, her delicate sister in the city, suffer more than they care to tell. The dark rings round the eyes, headachings, dizziness, palpitation or rheumatic twinges, denote a run-down system. The blood is poor, and is a bar to enjoyment of life. Scott's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, strengthens and vitalizes the system, and speedily restores the bloom of youth to the cheeks. It cures when all others fail.

A Forty-Year Old Grievance Removed

In Bath, Ont., Chase's Kidney Liver Pills are a standard remedy. Joseph Garber, of this town, suffered for 40 years with indigestion and its ever-present accompaniments—constipation and headache. K. & L. Pills are the only remedy that gave him relief. 25c. a box, of all druggists. One pill a dose.

The Natal contingent has defeated, with heavy loss, a force of two thousand Mashonas.

In Reply to Off-Repeated Questions.

It may be well to state, Scott's Emulsion acts as a food as well as a medicine, building up the wasted tissues and restoring perfect health after wasting fever.

The Sarsaparilophiles: "Sweet are the uses of adversity. To take a licking like a gentleman should be part of every polite education. You never know when you may want to exercise the graces of resignation and patience. Eighteen years even of prosperity is no guarantee that evil days will not befall one, and even the profound consciousness of being 'right' is not an absolute safeguard against the dangers that beset us every five years or so."

Don't Wait for the Sick Room.

The experience of physicians and the public proves that taking Scott's Emulsion produces an immediate increase in flesh; it is therefore of the highest value in Wasting Diseases and Constipation.

GERMAN IDEAS ON DUELING.

A Lame Defence in Which Even Scripture is Quoted.

A significant contribution to the duelling question in Germany has been published in the official Militar-Wochenblatt.

The writer divides his article into two sections, dealing respectively with the "idea of honor and the employment of the duel for its rehabilitation," and with the conflict between the practice and Christian principles. As to the first point, he argues that a distinction must be drawn between "external and internal" honor. The latter, which is a good conscience, can not be won away; but the former, which is the recognition of one's personal worth by others, must be defended at all costs. It is by staking one's life for this honor, when impugned, that its rehabilitation is possible.

The innocent man who falls in a duel has gone to his death, as it were, for the sake of his honor, while the guilty person has restored his honor externally and must settle the rest with his Maker.

The author then proceeds to declare that the officers' corps possesses a peculiar sort of honor which is closely connected with its martial profession. In war the officer's duty is to lead his men into the jaws of death, and the fear of death which seizes even the bravest can only be overcome by holding fast in time of peace to the principle "death before dishonor." Herwin lies the educational value of the duel for the officers. They may never fight one, but they know that they must be ready to do so in certain circumstances. "We are accustomed," he adds, "to certain well-tried methods and do not intend to sacrifice them to well-meant but false theories." The writer then quotes and expounds a large number of passages from the Bible, and by dint of twisting and turning proves to his own satisfaction that the practice is not forbidden by Christianity.
