Some Britons Fear Terrorist Army

HONEYMOON SPARKS ROW

GLASGOW (AP)—It started on the honeymoon.

The prosecutor said "The couple were in bed just after midnight when the argument arose as to who should do the shopping the next morning. Mulvey said it wasn't his job, pushed his wife out of bed and then attacked her with a broom."

As a result Joseph Mulvey, 22, landed in court. He admitted assaulting his 16-year-old bride, Rena, and was fined $5.

Mulvey promised his bride in court that the problem would never arise again. From now on, he said, they would do the shopping together.

"This is our first quarrel and our last," said Joe.

Douglas Offers Railway Policy

RIGGAR Salk (CP)—Railway policy in Canada must be made subservient to national policy.

Mr. Douglas, a member of the Democratic Party leader said Thursday night.

Abandonment of railway branch lines in the Prairie provinces must take into account the social and economic needs of the Canadian people and not be granted solely on the basis of a cost-benefit ratio.

It should not be forgotten that the people of Canada have already paid a large measure for the building of the railways, Mr. Douglas told a public meeting which he hosted for one year.

He said an NDP federal government would establish a national railway commission to integrate all forms of transportation in order to eliminate duplication of services.

French Secret Army Seen Behind Threats

LONDON (Reuters)—Some Britons have expressed fear that France's outlawed Secret Army organization might be extending its terrorist activities to Britain.

They felt this anxiety as police guarded opposition Labour members of Parliament Alice Bacon and Fenner Brockway after they received anonymous threatening calls threatening them with death at the hands of the Secret Army, a foe of French President de Gaulle.

However, others felt there was no logical reason why the Secret Army, thought to have considerable trouble on its hands in France, should want to stir up the British with terrorism.

The kidnapping of a filmed interview with top anti-Gaullist fugitive Georges Bidault by the BBC Monday night created considerable publicity in Britain. Some thought this might have stimulated a terrorist attack on anti-Gaullist or anti-Communist.

Reports from France said the Secret Army was being subjected to a stiff French security counter-attack and was thought to be short of both members and funds.

The movement of a Secret Army scare in Britain, it was argued, would make it harder than usual for home strengthening members to filter in and out of the country secretly as they have done in the past.

Brockway, 74, a well-known campaigner against racial discrimination, was also a member of the Secret Army.

Police sources said police found two threatening letters from the Secret Army in a threatening telephone call. The letters demanded "red" and threatened reprisals if it was not heeded.

However, the letters were said to have been written a year ago and were similar to circulars sent to many prominent persons at the time by the Secret Army in an underground organization.

Police believe the Secret Army has been trying to extract money from financial circles. It is known to be short of funds after last year's election.

Lafont was reported to have been firmly opposed to Secret Army activities last year, for reasons from his and other banks.

W.S. MacNutt Is Awarded Fellowship

W. Stewart MacNutt, department of history, University of New Brunswick, was one of 31 persons receiving awards of post-doctoral research fellowships in the humanities and social sciences, it was announced Thursday by the Canada Council.

He is formerly of Charlottetown and is a son of Major T.E. MacNutt.

The awards have an average value of $4,500 for married recipients and $4,000 for single recipients. In most cases, they are supplemented by allowances from the winner's employer.

The fellowships are tenable for one year in Canada or abroad and usually carry a travel allowance.

Six years ago Mr. MacNutt was awarded one of the Nuffield Foundation Scholarships, under which he studied for one year in England. Since then he has written a book "A History of New Brunswick, 1784 to 1897" which has recently appeared on the market.

Mr. Pearson, flying here from Saskatoon in the forenoon, spoke to about 300 Liberal party supporters and a couple of hundred college students in the basement of the school's new cafeteria building.

Steel beams from the $90,000 project were poked up by the wind and clumped in all directions, some reaching an island a mile away.

The roof and one wall of the building were splintered. One steel beam crashed into a nearby convent school like a spear.

Over, one against its owner's house. There were no reported injuries.

VATICAN CITY (AP)—Premier Khrushchev's atheist son-in-law met Pope John Thursday, bowed, shook hands and then chatted with him for 15 minutes.

The meeting with Adzhubel, chief editor of the Soviet government newspaper Izvestia, was the first of a Roman Catholic leader and an important Soviet Communist.

The audience may have laid the groundwork for a visit to the 85-year-old Pope by Khrushchev himself.

The Premier may visit Italy in the year.

The Adzhubel went to the private meeting from a general audience at which the Pope had received the $5,000 Balfour Peace Prize, an award that had drawn praise from Khrushchev.

WELCOMED BY POPE The Pope welcomed them at the private meeting of the apartment. The editor bowed his head slightly and shook hands.

The Pope spoke in Italian, Adzhubel in Russian.

"We talked about advancing peace," Adzhubel told a reporter later. "For obvious reasons I cannot disclose the details of our conversation."

Adzhubel said Wednesday he would tell the Pope he is "a confirmed atheist," but that he has "some confidence in peace that he has."

Moscow-Catholic relations have been shifting. Last October the Russian Orthodox Church accepted a Vatican invitation to send observers to the Roman Catholic ecumenical council in Geneva. A month later released a Ukrainian Catholic archbishop after 18 years in a Siberian prison.

FIRST VISIT Giovanni Gronchi, former president of Italy and president of the Italian-Soviet Balkan Commission, notified the Pope of the award. The foundation was established by the late Italian publisher Eugenio Bazzani. The Pope was awarded the foundation's prize last Friday for what he called his ceaseless work for peace.

The Pope said the award was "in homage to the constant actions of the church and the peace in favor of peace. He referred to the perfect supernatural neutrality of the church and its visible head, the pope."

"Such a neutrality is not intended to be purely passive, as the Pope's competence is limited to observing happenings and maintaining silence in the face of them. On the contrary, it is a neutrality which confirms all the church's vigor of testimony."

Adzhubel, 39, often looked up to the 85-year-old pope above the papal throne while Pope John spoke. At the finish, the Pope said Wednesday "a beautiful speech." Asked his impressions of the Pope, he replied: "Good."

Record Wind Is Reported At Cheticamp

CHETICAMP, N.S. (CP)—A wild storm that pounded the Maritimes with winds up to 100 miles an hour late Wednesday and early Thursday struck the community on the western Cape Breton shore with the most damaging winds in living memory.

The gales Wednesday night off the waters lying between the Prince Edward Island rapped apart the village's new school still under construction. Damage was estimated at $90,000.

End Of Minority Gov't Urged By Paul Martin

The April 8 federal election is a "make-or-buy" election in the history of Canada and what is involved is the very unity of Canada that we have established here in Confederation," Hon. Paul Martin, former minister of health and welfare under a Liberal government, said in Charlottetown last night.

He was the main speaker at a meeting at Birchwood High School which kicked off the election campaign in Queens County.

TWO FISHERMEN SAFE

Storm damage Reported in Amherst-Sackville Area

HALIFAX (CP)—The captain and crew member of the wrecked lobster vessel Ralpine were rescued from the island near Wood's Harbour, N.S., after being picked up Thursday afternoon by the tugboat Bernard Sealey out of Public, N.S.

Capt. Ralph D'Amico and his crew were rescued from the island after their 34-foot vessel was washed ashore by heavy seas and wrecked during the violent storm that battered the Maritimes Wednesday night and early Thursday.

Rescue Search and Rescue headquarters here said the two men, missing from their Wood's Harbour home port since about Wednesday noon, were in good condition.

They were spotted Thursday morning by an Albatross aircraft from Greenwood, N.S., Thursday morning thousands of dollars damage was caused along the Amherst-Sackville highway when winds gusting up to 100 miles an hour ripped apart the Tantalus Marshes.

Some 300 feet of roof was lifted off the Lord Amherst Motel and carried 150 feet through the air knocking out power lines and cutting communications between Amherst and Moncton. Motel owner Tony Downey estimated damage at $20,000.

Highest winds reported were 100 miles an hour at Trenton, N.S. airport. However there was no damage in the area.

Meanwhile a search was still underway for a Cessna 180 aircraft missing on a 30-mile flight from Till Cove to Beauséjour on the northeast coast of Newfoundland.

A 98-foot yacht belonging to Robert Purdy of Deep Brook, N.S., and Cmdr. Herb Smith of BECOS, Cornwallis, was reported to have sunk in the Annapolis River. It is believed to have been built about 30 years ago at a cost of $250,000 and was being refitted. Extent of damage was not immediately known.
