MR. AND MRS. CHARLES SMITH

Young Couple Plight Troth In Ceremony At Summerfield

St. James Church, Summerfield was the scene of a pretty wedding recently when Georgina, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Green, Emerald, became the bride of Charles Smith, son of Mr. William Smith and the late Mrs. Smith of Kinkora. The altar was tastefully decorated with bouquets of flowers.

Rev. Basil Croken was the officiating clergyman. The wedding music was in charge of Sister St. Jude who accompanied Messrs. Pope McMahon and Leslie Smith, brother-in-law and brother of the groom respectively.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was gowned in floor length white brocade dress with fitted bodice, featuring a sabrina neckline edged with jewelled Alecon lace. Long sleeves ending in points over the hands were caught snugly at the wrists. Unpressed pleats stemming from a rue at the back accented the princess skirt, which fell in graceful folds. A crown of sequins and crystals held in place a bouffant veil of French illusion. Her bouquet consisted of an orchid with white 'mums and trailing ivy.

The bride's attendants were her sisters, Miss Shirley Green as maid of honor and Miss Nancy Green as bridesmaid. They were gowned in starlite blue velvet, with matching feather and velvet hats. They carried muffs with white 'mums and silver pine.

The best man was Mr. Robert Smith of Halifax, N.S., nephew of the groom. Mr. Tommy Green, brother of the bride, and Mr. Elmer Mulligan were the guests to their pews which were marked with huge bows.

Mrs. Green chose for her daughter's wedding a beige brocade dress with white felt hat and gloves. Her corsage was of pale pink carnations. Mrs. Robert Shea, sister of the groom, was attired in a two - piece wool dress with white felt hat and corsage of pink carnations.

The reception was held at the Tartan Restaurant, Summerside.

For the honeymoon trip, the bride travelled in a Butte knit cherry colored suit, white fur hat, white leather gloves and an orchid corsage.

Out of town guests included Mr. and Mrs. Louis Smith of Halifax, N.S.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Sunshine, Gentle Winds Turn Thoughts To Spring

There was sunshine when we spread our pieces of wash to this morning, and a warming wind along the yards. And a new day at hand, fair and fresh, and the mildness prevailing turned our thoughts to the spring. . . Echoes lingered in our valley: sounds from the Highway over the hilltops, a passing machine on the road, Scampie's excited bark at a blithe company of sparrows grouped in a barberry bush by the house across the lane. And hark! What was that vague sound threading in with the rest? Could it be. . ? We smiled, all the while, as Alec would say, "listening hard." Were the Starlings already back to their summer-home in the garage? But we knew better. There was his letter received over distant miles, come at week-end.

How had it reached us? It was relayed by one of "The little green men" who do "ride about the world at night to bring you things." We heard the elfin chuckle last night between ours and James' pillows, when the star we had been regarding on the far side of the dark maze of branches on the white birch was growing fainter in our sight, being replaced by a pleasant drowsiness, and we knew we were drifting off then into the strange lovely Land of Sleep.

"Just a note" we read in bright script, "to ask you to see that our house gets an airing one of these times. You will know when. When Mack brings you the first sprays of pussy willow, I should say. . Meanwhile, I'm picturing it there. But how can I actually imagine it, when I've never spent a winter with you! I think of the snowfall, and truthfully I shiver. And I have felt your chilly winds. So we've decided to linger a while yet in this summer-land."

"But all the time I'm remembering our summers there. I'm seeing the blossoms up and down the valley. And I catch the fragrance of the springtime so sweet. I think of the neighbors so busy and happy with the building and settling in. . I suppose that big black cat is as-dear me, I almost said 'as sly as ever' when, believe me, I only mean curious! And Alex's 'Curiousity the Second' will also have sharp eyes and claws by this. There'll always some drawback to everything, isn't there? Nothing, alas, in this world is perfect. . Mama joins me (She's doing her dusting now-too busy to write even a word!) in sending our kindest regards to all the Family."

But Papa Starling, there are the perfections in this world: The perfect days and nights; the perfect song, and book, and verse; the perfect flower, the perfect love. A March Monday too can be perfect if it allows the housewife to spread her wash to the sun and a warming wind!

James voted the supper perfect when gift-smelts fried to an exact and delicate brown were our fare; caught, patiently with a hook and line these were, bigish and tasteful indeed.

"Choice fare this, Ellen," James beamed, adding seasoning and a sprinkle of vinegar to point the flavor.

Lights now. . And a fire's croon. And a kettle's song. And a March day done!

Until tomorrow — — Diary— Good-night. . .

MARY HAWORTH

Disrespect Of Women Is Based On Their Jealousy

Dear Mary Haworth: I was a skinny undeveloped girl in my early years and boys didn't notice me or ask for dates. After my figure developed I had more boy friends than I could manage.

I am 33 and have been married 12 years. I am a high school graduate with some business training and have worked to help meet expenses. We rent our apartment and own a moderately priced car.

My husband isn't the tall, dark and handsome type and I don't consider myself a beautiful exotic woman, yet I have always gotten along well with men, who praise my personality, looks, manner, etc. The problem is women, who act like cats. Most of them are jealous of me. I don't know why.

I like to swim, dance, cook, take walks, read, write letters, and I have taken up dressmaking, journalism and beauty culture. I belong to the YWCA, where I swim a lot; and I go to church. But even at church the women are jealous of me; I can sense it. If they talk to me, it is only to hurt my feelings.

I don't show off; I dress simply; I would like girls and women to be my friends and I try to be friendly. When I got married, so many relatives and acquaintances whom I invited didn't attend. It is the same with parties I've given— as if I were poison.

As a married woman I can't have men companions and when my husband does something I don't care to fish. I would like to have a girl friend or a friendly couple to turn to. In short, I would like to have women friends who wouldn't be jealous and wouldn't hurt my feelings. Can you help me? Or perhaps you can tell me where I may be wrong? - C.S.

Dear C. S.: In general, the mass of womankind tends to get together by tacit agreement, to trample, deride, punish or diminish (if possible) the more attractive or more outstanding woman who's vulnerable.

In committing this crime against caritas (God's love of us), individuals in the mob are motivated by inferiority feelings— on the score of looks, charm, talent, achievement and the like — as they take the measure of the innocent creature whose very existence invokes their competitive fury.

However, the securely brought-up girl, whose selfhood has been nurtured with love and respect in a sturdy, devoted family circle, is able to make her way through that kind of storm without forfeiting self-respect or integrity.

Self-esteem is indelibly a part of her emotional make-up She is deeply self-accepting. She has her own yardstick of real values. She doesn't try to come to terms with mob criticism. She realizes it has no more accuracy than an image reflected in a distorting mirror. She lives above "the unkind cut," behaving with modest authority in the matter of being true to herself.

But in your case, it seems you've tried to find favor with your critics on their ground. You've been wistfully defensive and hopeful by turns, in bargaining for friendship with the unfriendly. Also, you've been self - defeatingly hypersensitive in relation to other women's meanness of mind.

Another woman's meanness is her misfortune, essentially. Even if it is focussed upon you, it is still her problem, rather than yours, if you simply refuse to be implicated in it; if you decline either to truckle to it or fight against it.

To win friends, stop searching for them. As of now you are narrowly self - engrossed, intent on wrestling personal profit from every encounter: a grasping spirit that rouses resistance in equally selfish contenders. Give yourself to good works— helping the aged, the orphaned, the destitute. Get outside yourself, as the phrase is, and your problem will evaporate. M.H.
