TRAGEDY ON ELK CREEK.

It was reported to the sheriff of Park County that someone had been shot and killed at one of the lumber camps in the big timber that borders on Elk Creek Valley, and the sheriff went up there to see about it.

The man who brought the news had not come to the county seat for that purpose; he was just passing through, and having heard of the shooting it occurred to him that possibly he ought to mention the matter. He did not know the name of the man who had been killed nor that of the man who had done the killing. He did not even know at which of the four camps the homicide had been committed. Someone had casually mentioned the matter to him as he was on his way to the county seat, and he in turn in a casual way mentioned it to the sheriff.

The people on Elk Creek were no more excited over the affair than was this imperturbable informant. It was not uncommon that a man should be killed on Elk Creek, and they did not bother much about such things. A wood chopper more or less was of no consequence to them. If some half-dozen or more choppers should have been killed the Elk Creek country would not have gone into mourning.

The choppers themselves were big, husky, reckless devils, quiet and industrious enough when no whiskey was to be had, but ugly, desperate, and bloodthirsty when drunk. There were no towns within convenient distance of the camps, and the choppers' opportunities for amusement were consequently few—even such rough forms of amusement and pleasure as wood choppers crave. The only recreation they had was to occasionally get drunk and kill each other. There were few settlers on Elk Creek, and it sometimes happened that the news of a killing never got beyond the limits of the camp in which the tragedy had taken place.

They had their own crude notion of justice—these choppers. If the killing were unprovoked, premeditated or malicious they decorated the most convenient limb with the body of the offender; if, on the other hand, it was a fair fight or there was justification for the act, they buried the victim—if they had time—congratulated the survivor and thought no more about it.

The sheriff of Park County, Dan King—"Big Dan" he was generally called—had peculiar ideas about indiscriminate homicide which were in conflict with the views of the Elk Creek people on that subject. He had "given it out cold" when he was "runnin' fer offis' that he would arrest any man on Elk Creek or any number of men on Elk Creek who might be guilty of violating the law; if necessary, he would arrest all the men on Elk Creek, even if the infant industry of lumbering should be thereby suspended. He was a handy man in a fight. He was as big as any man on Elk Creek, and, as he expressed it, could "swaller as much sand as any of 'em."

Fighting was one of Big Dan's weaknesses; eating was another. He was combative most of the time and hungry all the time.

He left Pine Grove early in the morning expecting to arrive at the first lumber camp in time for a noonday dinner. To make sure of this he had taken a "short cut" from the valley through the timber. It had been some time since the sheriff had ridden through the forest, and once among the big trees he became confused as to the cardinal points of the compass. He saw the sun cross the meridian without having found the camp. Late in the afternon he came to a camp—a deserted one; it had been abandoned a year previous.

There were numerous trails and old "logging roads" through the woods. He followed one that seemed most recently made, but before he had travelled a mile it ended abruptly among the big trees. Then he tried another, and still another, but with no better success. Finally he was compelled to admit to himself that he was lost. He was ravenously hungry, having eaten nothing since early morning.

It was twilight; soon it would be night. From far up in the hills where the pines grew thick and straight and tall came the screams of a puma and the answering cry of a lynx, but he had no fear of these animals; he had heard "mountain lions" and "bob cats" before. He had never known fear of any kind, unless it was at the thought that some day he might "git ketched out," as he was now, and starve to death.

If he had not been hungry he would have unsaddled his broncho and passed the night in the woods; his couch, the thick layers of pine needles; his pillow, a big California saddle; his lullaby, the whisper of the pines as the breath of the mountains stirred their young branches. Under the circumstances he decided to "keep on rustlin'" until he "struck grub." To go back to Pine Grove was out of the question. Even if he were certain of the direction he could not reach there before morning. One cannot gallop through the Elk Creek country at night.

The first problem was to get out of the woods; this problem was solved by the broncho, who had been given free rein, and in a short time Dan heard the noisy gurgling little Elk Creek as it blustered and laughed its way to the South Platte.

Near the head of the Creek lived a ranchman named Eli Williams, who came to the county seat once a year to pay his taxes, and at no other time unless "drawn" on a jury. The knowledge that Eli's ranch was somewhere within a short ride did not have a very cheering effect on the big sheriff, considering his famished condition, for Dan and Eli were, in a sense, enemies. They belonged to antagonistic political parties, and Eli had strenuously opposed Dan's election. The ranchman was such a masterful politician in his locality that he succeeded in casting the solid Elk Creek vote, forty-three in all, against the sheriff. The majority on Elk Creek against Dan would have been larger, but most of the choppers got helplessly drunk as soon as they arrived in town and never went near the polls.

Under any other circumstances the big sheriff would not have thought of going to Eli's ranch, but hunger was gnawing at him like a she wolf at a bone. Big Dan was a proud man in some respects. The idea of intruding as a guest at the ranch of his political enemy was repugnant, but on the principle that a live coward is better than a dead hero Dan had ingeniously argued with himself that an humble man lined with food was better than a haughty one stretched out cold and stark in a mountain valley—a victim of starvation. This big hulk of a sheriff was a perfect slave to his appetite. In a few moments more, he told himself, he should be gnawing at the pommel of his saddle.

If he only had some excuse for calling upon Eli, even the shadow of an excuse, it would relieve him from the humiliating position of an unwelcome guest. Big Dan was fertile in resources, a man of ingenuity. He soon bethought him of a good excuse for calling upon Eli. Possibly the ranchman could give him some information about the killing. Yes, it was plainly his duty to see Eli and find out what he knew, if anything, about the reported homicide in the lumber camp.

Big Dan had never been to Eli's ranch, but he knew that by following Elk Creek to its head waters he could easily find it. A half hour later he saw a light shining from a cabin window near the head of the valley.

"Hullo," he called, as he reined up near the door.

"Hullo, you," came an answering voice, and a moment later Eli was standing in the doorway.

"I'm Dan King, the sheriff. I hear there's been a killin' up this way, an' I come up to see about it."

If Eli's face had been clearly visible, Big Dan would have seen it grow pale, but the light was at the ranchman's back, and the only thing the sheriff noticed was a rifle leaning against the wall within easy reach of the man in the doorway.

"Dunno nothin' about it, sheriff," growled Eli, as Dan dismounted.

"I'm lookin' fer a place to put up over night; ain't had no feed since sun up, an' I'm as hungry as a coyote; thought mebbe I could camp with you till mornin'," said the sheriff.

"I ain't never turned nobody away from my cabin," replied Eli, "but we ain't got no grub sich as you are used to. You may have to sleep in the corral, ez we're purty crowded with the wimmin folks."

This meager offer of hospitality, reluctantly spoken, was gladly accepted by Big Dan.

There were but two rooms in Eli's cabin. The sheriff was conducted into the larger one, which served as a sitting room, parlor and bedroom. It was late in the summer, and Eli had a brisk fire in the big fireplace, which served the double purpose of dispensing heat and light.

"Sorry I can't offer you some grub you'd like," said Eli, "but the fact is, we ain't got no meat; ain't had none fer a month."

A savory smell came from the adjoining room, where supper was being prepared, for Eli and his family had not had their evening meal.

"Well, now, Mister Williams, you know I ain't noippycure, but whatever that is cookin' will do fer me; it don't need no apollergy," replied the sheriff.

Eli's face again turned suddenly pale. He excused himself and left the room, while Tobe, his 18-year-old son, entertained the sheriff.

When Eli returned Dan did not hear him. The sheriff had his back to the door, and the ranchman came in silently behind him, holding a rifle on a line with Dan's head. The first intimation the guest had of his host's return was when he heard the command:

"Throw up your hands, sheriff!"

Big Dan's hands went up promptly, and then Tobe "covered" the officer with a six-shooter.

"See here, sheriff," said Eli, "before this thing goes any further we've got to come to an understanding. Now, of course, it's your business to see that the laws is obeyed, an' I ain't got nothin' ag'in you on that account. Seein' as we're here by ourselves, I don't mind tellin' you I done thet killin' myself. It was a groundhog case—I had ter kill him."

"In that case you'd better be car'ful how you talk, 'cause it'll be used ag'in you on the trial."

"I ain't makin' no figgers there's goin' ter be a trial," replied Eli. "I hear you're a white man, an' in that case we'll squar' this right here 'fore supper."

"You've got the drop on me, Mr. Williams," said Big Dan, in a manner meant to be excessively polite, "but you can't squar' no killin' with me. You kin shot me, but you can't git out o' the country—if you don't shoot, I'm a-goin' to arrest you jest as soon as you lower that gun. You're in a mighty ticklish place, Mr. Williams. You've got ter shoot or go to gaol. I'm a-waitin' fer you ter make up your mind."

"But I had ter kill him," protested Eli. "He was comin' aroun' here every day botherin' the wimmin folks till they got skeered of him."

"I ain't a judgin' of the case, Mister Williams," said Dan. "Mebbe you ought to a killed him, mebbe not. I ain't no jury; I'm only arrestin' of you."

The irony of the latter statement made Eli laugh.

"I'm a gittin' tired, Mr. Williams, a holdin' my hands up; I wish you'd shoot or give up pretty quick."

Tobe unbuckled the sheriff's belt and relieved him of his weapons; then he was allowed to lower his hands.

"Air ye hungry, sheriff?"

"I could eat a saddle blanket, Mr. Williams."

"Reckon you could eat a piece o' him?"

"Him!" gasped the sheriff.

"Yaas, sir; him."

"Eat him! You ain't a-goin' ter eat him?"

"Ya-as, sir; I'm a-goin' ter eat him; ain't nothin' else up here to eat. Now, if you eat some of him ain't you just as guilty under the law as I be fer killin' him?" asked Eli.

"I ain't hungry enough fer that," said the sheriff.

"We run out o' meat, an' a man can't starve," continued Eli; "leastwise I ain't a-goin' to. If we hadn't been on the p'int of starvin' I wouldn't a'shot him. Clear case o' self-defence, ain't it?"

Notwithstanding the fact that the sheriff was ravenously hungry the bare thought of eating a man made him sick, but the cold-blooded recital of Eli had aroused in him a morbid curiosity.

"How did you cook him?" he asked.

"Stew," replied Eli, sniffing. "Smell him?"

Big Dan sniffed also, but the odor was no longer savory to him.

It was all clear to Big Dan now. This man was insane—a maniac. Why had he not noticed before how the ranchman's eyes glittered, and what a vacant expression was on his face? And this maniac was holding a cocked rifle within a few feet of his head. It was time to use discretion and diplomacy.

"Mister Williams," said the sheriff, "I weaken; put down your gun an' I'll help you eat him. * * *

When the sheriff pushed back his chair from Eli's humble table the waistband of his trousers was straining nearly to bursting.

"Sheriff," said Eli, "you had me skeered, but I'm glad you're a white man an' kin see it's a clar case o' self-defence. I hated to vi'late the game laws 'cause I know they're strick, but I had ter kill that elk."

"Mister Williams," replied the sheriff, solemnly, "I never shirked my duty, but under the sarcumstances I don't mind sayin' ter you——"

Here the sheriff indicated for Eli to bend down his head, for the "wimmin folks" were present, and, placing a big hand to his capacious mouth, whispered the remainder of his sentence. The "wimmin folks" did not catch the full import of the whispered words, but they referred to the game laws and a hot place to which they might be consigned for all the sheriff cared under the present circumstances.

STRONG DRINK.

It's Terrible Effects!

A Shattered Nervous System Built Up and Strengthened by Paine's Celery Compound.

It is in the combined perfection of sensation, motion, intelligence and speech that man excels all created animals.

The brain, that grand centre of sensation and perception, and the whole nervous system, are wonderfully made, and man's happiness and very life depend upon their condition of health.

The human brain and the nervous system become impaired, shattered and broken down in various ways. Careless living, loose habits and over-indulgences, when persisted in, and continued for a length of time, tend to wreck and destroy the whole nervous organism.

There is no form of disease that can more rapidly shatter the system, or more surely lead to death, than the use of strong drink. Its effects are felt in every nerve and tissue, and its poison can be traced in every drop of blood.

It will plant courage and hope in the hearts of many men who are broken down, and whose nervous systems are completely shattered, to learn that, with a firm determination to avoid strong drink, their bodies can be rebuilt, their nerves made strong, their blood purified, and life made happy and worth living. This grand work of re-creation can be accomplished by the use of Paine's Celery Compound, nature's great life restorer. No medical agency in the world is so well adapted for the rebuilding of brain and body.

Mr. Samuel B. Guild, of Ellershouse, Hants Co., N. S., writes as follows:—

"I wish to express my gratitude for the great good accomplished in my case by your Paine's Celery Compound. I had commenced using strong drink when quite young, with the result that my whole system was run-down and shattered. I was under the care of several doctors, but they did not seem to understand my case, and could do nothing for me. I commenced using your Paine's Celery Compound, and it soon made me a new man. My nervous system is completely built up, my appetite natural and healthy, and I feel better and stronger than ever before. Paine's Celery Compound has done these wonders for me, and I cannot thank you sufficiently."

ITS VALUE PROVED.

Opinions expressed in Quebec with regard to the New Specific.

QUEBEC, June 3.—There has been considerable discussion in this city, both among the medical fraternity and private citizens, with regard to the numerous undisputed cures from various diseases of the kidneys through the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills. The matter has been not only discussed privately among the friends and acquaintances of those who have received benefits from the use of the remedy named, but has been chronicled in public press. The general consensus of opinion is that the medicine has undrgone a thorough test and has proved itself fully deserving of the great praise which has been bestowed upon it.

Canon Rutherford, 16 year old, and his cousin, 19, fought a duel with dirks, near Hogeye, Arkansas, yesterday. The lads disliked each other from childhood and the fight was the outcome of an old feud. Both were fatally wounded.

15 Years of Itching.

W. Golding, commercial traveller, 130 Esther St., Toronto, says: "For 15 years I have suffered untold miseries from Itching Piles, sometimes called pin worms. Many and many weeks have I had to lay off the road from this trouble. I tried eight other pile ointments and so-called remedies with no permanent relief to the intense itching and stinging, which irritated by scratching, would bleed and ulcerate. One half a box of Chase's Ointment cured me completely."

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ar.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."
UNITED HOSPITAL AND DISPENSARY, Boston, Mass.
