BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

(By Thornton W. Burgess)

THE SMART ONE
Happy living is an art; Those possessing it are smart. —Blacky the Crow.

Everybody knows that Blacky the Crow is smart. If he were not smart, if he were the least bit stupid, he never could have lived in the Green Forest as long as he has. Green Forest and Green Meadow folk who are not smart, seldom live long. So, when you see one of them around for a long time, you may be sure that that one is one of the smartest of its kind.

Long, long ago, Blacky learned to use his eyes. He learned never to miss little things. You see, it takes a lot of food for a bird as big as Blacky, and he must find that food every day.

"It is a bite here and a bite there that fills a stomach. Who overlooks little things is likely to go hungry," says Blacky.

So it is that as Blacky flies over the Green Forest and the Green Meadows, those bright eyes of his miss very little down below. When he sees something unfamiliar, or something familiar that is out of place, he doesn't pass on until he has learned all he can about it. It isn't just curiosity, although he has plenty of that. He is too

Then he lighted on a tree where he could see that clam.

smart to let curiosity, or his interest, get him into trouble if he can help it. He doesn't fly headlong into trouble the way some boys and girls rush into trouble. He looks things over carefully beforehand.

This day Blacky was flying over a part of the Green Forest which he had seldom visited. Below him he could see a brook, a small brook winding among the trees. It wasn't Laughing Brook, but one some distance from that. As he flew, those sharp eyes of his were watching the banks on both sides of that little brook. You see, long ago he had learned that often something he can eat can be found at the water's edge. You see, he isn't a fussy person. No, sir, Blacky the Crow isn't fussy.

"It doesn't pay to be too fussy," declares Blacky. "Fussiness and an empty stomach go together."

Now, directly below him was a small pool and on the shore a little way from the edge of the water was a familiar object. It was familiar, but it wasn't where it should have been. Right away, Blacky was curious. What he saw was a Mussel on a fresh-water clam. Blacky circled, looking down and watching it. Then he lighted on a tree where he could see that clam.

Now Blacky knows all about Fresh-water Clams and how good they are to eat. Many times he has enviously watched Jerry Muskrat bring up Clams from the bottom of Laughing Brook or the Smiling Pool, open the hard shells, and feast on the contents. But a clam had no business to be out on the bank. Blacky could see that the sticks and leaves had been very much scattered all about where that clam lay. What had happened there? He wished he knew.

Had he been just a little earlier, he would have seen a young Kingfisher caught by that clam. He had seen it lying partly open and had poked his bill in to get the clam. The shell had closed on the tip of his bill and held him fast. He had flapped and flopped and flopped and flapped on the shore until at long last he had gotten free, a sadder and wiser young Kingfisher. That is how that clam happened to be on the shore instead of in the water.

Blacky cocked his head on one side as he studied that clam and the surroundings with his bright eyes. He cocked his head on the other side and did the same thing. It didn't matter which side his head was cocked that clam just didn't belong out on the shore. Why was it there? Was it a trap of some kind? He was sorely tempted to fly down and pick up that clam, but he didn't. He was too smart for that. He just waited and watched.

STRONG COMPETITION

Good defensive bidding, coupled with even better defensive play, brought a just reward to East-West in the following deal:

East dealer. Both sides vulnerable. North-South 80 on score.

♠ 9 5 4 2
♦ A 10 7 4 3
♣ J 10 8 3

West
♠ A 7
♥ K 7 6
♦ A 8 6 2
♣ A 7

North
♠ K 10 8 5
♥ 4 3
♦ K 9 8
♣ J 5

As is so often the case, North-South's part-score spurred the bidding all around the table. The auction was:

East	South	West	North
Pass	1♥	Pass	Pass
2♦	2♥	3♣	Pass
Pass	3♥	Pass	Pass
Pass	Pass	Pass	Pass

A diamond lead would have given South a laydown, but West was not accommodating in that respect! He realized that under the circumstances East might have had to bid a suit lacking the top cards—a possibility always taken into account by experts when partner's bid was forced by conditions—and so West opened the spade jack, for the greater safety it promised. (Actually, a heart lead would have been best of all, but West could scarcely be expected to know that!)

On the spade opening, East played low, and South won with the queen. The heart king was then laid down; East won and shifted to his top diamond. South played the queen; West won and returned the spade three. South took East's king and led the heart jack. West won with the queen—and now came the critical point of the play! If West had returned anything except the card he did lead, declarer either would have established a spade trick in dummy or would have made two clubs—but West laid down the club queen!

That was a little more than South could cope with! It would do no good to hold up the club ace, since West would certainly lead a second round; and when the club ace was played, South found himself with one loser too many.
