Council Negotiations Will Resume With Employees

The City Council will resume negotiations with representatives of the civic employees union. This action was agreed on Monday night at the regular April meeting of the civic administrators. It followed the reading of a communication relative to this matter received from the Charlottetown local.

Councillors Foster, O'Neill and Haslam were named a committee of three and charged with the task of studying the locals demands, and preparing the way for further talks. The request that negotiations be re-opened was made by the union in the light of the recent decision handed down by the Province's Supreme Court in respect to the appeal made by the Summerside civic employees union. The Court ruled that it was permissible for civic bodies to negotiate with their employees in respect to all matters excepting "salaries, wages and dismissals."

AGRICULTURAL NEWS

P.E.I. Department of Agriculture

A milking machine needs to be taken apart so that all surfaces that come in contact with milk are brushed in a dairy washing solution after each milking. This is easy to learn to do in less than ten minutes per unit with any modern milking machine.

A cleaning rod should be used for the long milk hose. Apply the same principles as for other utensils. We need to 1. Rinse the machine by drawing a pail of full fresh, clean, cold water through each unit immediately after milking before the vacuum pump is shut off. 2. Then use two ounces or four tablespoons of dairy washing soda to a pail of warm water at 125 degree F. drawing it through the machine. 3. Next, take apart all the milk tubes, teat cup inflations, valves, pail head and pail then brush with the warm dairy soda solution. 4. Rinse all parts with clean, warm water to remove the washing solution. 5. Scald with boiling hot water and store in a clean dry place.

The teat cup assembly requires further attention between milkings to prevent an increase in the number of bacteria. After the washing treatment, the best way for the average farmer and fill it with a 1-2 per cent solution of lye so that all surfaces that touch milk are completely in contact with the solution until the next milking. Just before milking again the lye solution needs to be discarded and an approved sterilizing solution drawn through the machine. It is easy to take care of a milking machine in just a few minutes if it is always done correctly after every milking so that it is never allowed to get dirty.

The lye solution should be prepared in the following manner: 1. Mix one can of lye with a gallon of water. This is known as the stock solution. 2. Then add 3 or 4 ounces of stock solution to a gallon of cold water, invert bottle and place on rack.

PREPARING COWS
1. All cows in the herd should be treated as an individual. Some cows have a nervous disposition and should be treated accordingly.
2. Cows easily milked should be attended first.
3. Cows udder should be kept clipped.
4. Before milking the cows, the udder should be washed and massaged for at least twenty seconds with a damp cloth at a temperature of 130 degree F., then remove a couple of streams of milk from each teat into a strip cup as the first milk removed from the udder is very high in bacteria. After this is done the machine is attached to the udder and the milking proceeded with.

5. Try and get cows to milk fast, do not leave machine on udder for more than three minutes. Then strip by hand. Through time she will need very little stripping by hand and while one cow is milking the other cow can be prepared.
6. After machine is removed from the udder, teats could be dipped in Chlorine solution between cows.
7. The cow is a wonderful machine, she circulates 400 gallons of blood through her system in order to produce 1 pound of milk.
8. Sanitation must be practised at all times.

GRADE BUYING OF MILK

The first item under panel discussion at the Cheesemakers' general meeting at Holiday Inn, Red Deer, March 11, was "Purchasing Milk from Producers on a Grade Basis." Chairman of the discussion L. M. Silcox, Supervisor of Dairy Factory Inspection stressed the need for only top quality milk going into the cheese vat to bring forth a top quality cheese. Modern methods make it easier for the producer to turn out such a product. It's uneconomical when he doesn't use them. Still some borderline milk is coming in to lower the quality of the rest of the vat. What to do about it?

Panel members D. J. Prince, Calgary, J. J. Klassen, Coaldale and J. Duerksen, Linden were unanimous in their opinion that when they bought quality milk it resulted in improved cheese. To grade cheese milk it must undergo the reductase and sediment tests. These show the producer at a glance what grade his milk belongs in. Because cheese is also graded on a sediment test it is important to sell the producer on the idea of clean milk rather than cleaned milk, says D. H. McCallum, Dairy Commissioner, Alberta, Department of Agriculture.

New regulations tighten these testing requirements, and it was decided that those who shipped reject milk would first be informed, then visited to help them improve their condition, and following no improvement be cut off from shipment.

INJURED FRUIT TREES

Fruit trees suffering from winter injury, mice injury and mechanical injury can be invigorated and restored to profitable production by two simple orchard practices — bridge grafting and inarching. If bridge grafting and inarching, are employed following severe winters, many of the trees which later die from severe trunk and crotch injuries, would now be producing commercial crops.

Bird grafting and inarching are best done in the early spring just as soon as the bark slips easily. This is usually after the first flush of sap has taken place and the buds on the tree have begun to swell. The operations can, however, be carried out at any time during spring when the bark is slipping but it is better to bridge when dormant scions and seedlings are available. Seedlings that have leaved out can be used but are more difficult to transplant. Additional information in connection with bridge grafting and inarching operations is obtainable from the Provincial Department of Agriculture, Box 2000 Charlottetown.

SELECTING LUMBER

Hammer and saw dusted off, the budding carpenter is anxious to get his hands on some lumber for more than these minutes. Boards of sufficient strength and quality suited to the job he wants to undertake. As hardwood is generally manufactured into flooring and furniture, softwood, used for construction, will probably be his choice.

Quality and strength of wood are affected by grain, defects, and indirectly by moisture content. For strength look for a straight grain running parallel to the sides of the board. Knots, and so lower the grade. Freshly cut or green lumber should not be used in house construction. Although cheaper than dried lumber, it soon proves some expensive when difficulties such as shrinkage, nail popping, warping, checking and cracking arise.

Now for the forms of softwood lumber. Dimension lumber in 2 or more inches thick. It must be strong, stiff and uniform in size as it is used for framing, joists, rafters and studs. High quality dimension lumber permits only defects which do not impair strength. Common boards less than 2" thick are for general purposes. Square edged, they are planned on one or more sides and edges. Finish lumber is used for interior, exterior trim and flooring, and consists of select quality. Only a few small imperfections are allowed. While dimension lumber is judged primarily on the basis of strength boards and finish lumber are graded on the basis of appearance.

Buying lumber of insufficient strength and quality is naturally unwise, says Miss Sanderson; buying better quality than is needed is extravagant. Figure out what your particular job requires — approximate grade and type. Then write down thickness, width and length of each piece needed and the number of pieces of each size.

Store lumber in a dry place to avoid warping, staining and other possible ill effects and stack it as it's done in a lumber yard. When storing outside put in on a level foundation of the ground. Protect from rain and ground moisture with tarpaulins.
