HOW PEANUTS GROW.

They Start In the Air and Afterward Burrow Into the Ground.

Most residents of the north have wholly erroneous ideas about the way in which peanuts grow. If questioned on the subject, nine persons out of ten would probably declare with confidence that this favorite luxury of circus going youth is a root development, much as potatoes are. That peanuts, when ripe are dug out of the earth is true, but they begin operations in the air and never have anything to do with the roots of their parent vine. From a bulletin issued by the department of agriculture is gleaned the following information on this interesting subject:

"The blossom of the peanut is at the end of a long, pedicellike calyx tube, the ovary being at the base. After the fall of the flower, the peduncle, or "spike," elongates and bends downward, pushing several inches into the ground, where the ovary at its extremity begins to enlarge and develops into a pale, yellowish, wrinkled, slightly curved pod, often contracted in the middle, containing from one to three seeds. Should the 'spike' by accidents not be enabled to thrust its point in the ground within a few hours after the fall of the flower it withers and dies.

"More or less abundantly scattered over the roots of the peanut plant are warts of about the size of a pinhead, or larger. These tubercles, as they are usually called, play a very important part in the life history of the plant. Within them, while in a fresh or growing state, may be seen, by the aid of a good microscope, myriads of very minute organisms. These bacteria like bodies live partly on the substance supplied from the roots, but at the same time they take from the air and elaborate for the use of the plant considerable quantities of nitrogen. Nitrogen is the most expensive element that must be supplied to plants in fertilizers. The organisms living in these porous tubercles take it abundantly from the air, of which it comprises about five-fifths, and supply it to the plant without any cost. In this way a total amount of nitrogen is often acquired by the plant far in excess of the amount analyses show to be present and available in the soil.

"Like many other extensively cultivated plants, the peanut has not been found in a truly wild state, and hence it is difficult to fix upon its habitat. So widely has it been cultivated in eastern countries that some botanists have attempted to trace its spread from China and Japan, thence through the East Indian islands to India, and thence to Africa, where in the seventeenth century it was so extensively cultivated and had become such an important article of native food that the slavedealers loaded their vessels with it, using it as food for their cargoes of captives. But the weight of authority seems to be in favor of accepting it as a native of Brazil, thus adding the peanut to the four other plants of commercial importance that America has contributed to the agriculture of the world—namely, cotton, Indian corn, potato and tobacco. Though it may be a native of the western continent, it early became a largely cultivated plant in the warmer portions of the old world, occupying a distinct place in the agriculture of those countries long before its merits were recognized in the land of its origin."

The Arabs of Sinai.

Each night we called a council after dinner and discussed many things with people. Our hunters were summoned, and while Joseph interpreted their swarthy faces peered through the tent door into the light, and when the conference was over they received a handful of tobacco, coveted even more than food. These men were as anxious for a successful hunt as we could desire, but their advice was not always sound.

They are like children and think that if they have obeyed a thing once it will always recur. In my opinion the sinister reputation which has to some extent attached to these Arabs of Sinai since the tragic murder of Professor Palmer at the time of the Arabi rebellion is undeserved. They were probably induced by secret messages from Cairo to regard his mission to obtain camels as an act of war, and they treated him and his companions as they and their people have always treated their enemies.

I found them trustworthy. They drive a hard bargain; but, this ratified, the conditions are kept faithfully. Their goats are tended on the mountains by the unmarried girls, a sure sign of good manners. My daughters soon found that they could wander unattended for many miles from camp to camp, secure of an unaffectedly gracious reception from any casual tent dweller that they met. Could this be said of any civilized country on the shores of the Mediterranean?—E. N. Buxton in Nineteenth Century

The First Suez Canal.

According to Herodotus, Pharaoh Necho, 450 years before the Christian era, commenced the construction of a canal branching out from the Nile and traversing the desert to the head of the gulf of Suez. When about half completed, and after the expenditure of an incredible amount of labor, the work was abandoned, owing to an oracle which the king had consulted warning him that if the enterprise was completed it would be for the benefit of his enemies, the barbarians, and probably entangle the nation in foreign complications.

The work was subsequently completed by Ptolemy II and afterward restored by Trajan. The Grand canal was stated as being far superior to any other canal in the known world. Its breadth was such that two galleys abreast could be navigated on it, and by it the riches and merchandise of the east were conveyed from the Red sea to the Nile, and thence to the Mediterranean. Strong opposition was raised during the construction, on the ground that, the land through which it passed being below the level of the Red sea, the canal would be the means of flooding it. To overcome this difficulty a dam, or sluice, was placed across it, with doors which opened to give passage to the vessels, and then were closed again. After the lapse of several centuries this canal was allowed to go to ruin, but traces of it still remain.—Longman's Magazine.

A Family of Fish.

A New-Yorker sitting on the edge of a small Adirondack lake was attracted by a school of tiny fish that seemed to move in remarkable union. Watching for a long time he discovered that the infant fish were guarded by the parents, for whenever the young began to stray they were driven back into the school by a large fish on one side or the other, and whenever a strange fish approached, one of the guardians rushed at him and drove him off. The watcher noted the movements of several small schools for two hours, and vows that the little creatures were tended like a drove of sheep.

Parents Must Have Rest.

A President of one of our Colleges says: "We spent many sleepless nights in consequence of our children suffering from colds, but this never occurs now: We use Scott's Emulsion and it quickly relieves pulmonary troubles."

A recent breach of promise case in England brought an important question prominently bef re the public. A doctor who had been engaged to a young lady, on discovering that her mother had died of phthisis at an early age, refused to complete the contract. The judge and jury took the view that the defence was not put forward in good faith, and gave a verdict against the doctor, with heavy damages. In some comments on the case the Hospital remarks that if it be a duty which only the most urgent circumstances can countervail for a woman who has a history of hereditary consumption behind her to refrain from marriage, one need not be surprised to find many people maintaining that no persons should be allowed by law to contract marriages in cases where hereditary consumption can be definitely proved to taint both parties to the contract. That is to say, if a man of definitely phthisical history proposes to marry a woman of definitely phthisical history, the law, according to this view, should put its foot down and say "no." A simple statute of this kind, if universally known, would enforce physiological instruction by act of parliament; it would check unwise engagements; it would prevent much misery to innocent offspring; and it would considerably limit the actual number of consumptives in a very short period of time.

"Eudora," is the name of the new black dress fabric put upon the market by the Priestleys, whose famous dress goods are a household word all over the world. It is like their much-esteemed Henrietta cloths; indeed, it has all the merits, and a few things which they lack. It is made in black only, it is a perfect dust-shedder; has extra weight and width; and, fitting easily and draping gracefully, it gives a distinction to the wearer which all of Priestly's goods confer. This is their excellence, which sets them apart from all other goods. Wrapped on "The Varnished Board," and Priestley's name stamped on every fivey ards.

"I understand the critics showed your poems a great deal of consideration," said the young woman. "Why they didn't say a word about them," replied the young man. "That's what I meant."

PRINCIPLES OR VOTES—WHICH

Both will be important in the coming elections. Both parties want votes; principles may come in later. Some people say that principles tell in the long run more powerfully and conqueringly than votes. Certainly the principle, or root motive of Rigby, has told convincingly all over the country. The old rubber waterproof is dead and buried. The problem was to produce a garment while, while being perfectly waterproof, should at the same time, be unobjectionable as an ordinary overcoat, This dual character is admirably sustained in Rigby Porous Waterproofs. A Spring Overcoat; a waterproof garment; perfect ventilation; durable service. Don't be afraid of the rain or the chilly air; Rigby will protect you from both. Rigby is talked about; worn by thousands. ...

Both of the big Canadian railroads show an increase in earnings for the first week of May, the Grand Trunk one of $1.500 and the C. P. R. one of $6,000. The price of wheat keeps at a comparatively good figure, the prices of cattle are fair, if not high, the pastures are good, the crops well in and in many places up, the weather is forcing, trade is improving, work seems plenty, and the Montreal Gazette remarks Sir Richard Cartwright is so savage that in Parliament he can hardly speak civilly of a Conservative minister. All the signs of a good time coming are on hand.

THE KENT CASE.

Phsicians Universally Admit the Diagnosis to have been Correct.

Ottawa, April 22—The diagnosis in the case of Mr. G. H. Kent, of this city, whose recovery from Bright's disease by the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills has been so extensively chronicled appears to have been a very correct one. The swelling of the body and extremities to an abnoral size the fearful convulsions and subsequent insensibility, the racking pains, the formation of the hard ridges across the pit of the stomach and the great loss of albumen are all symptoms of this terrible disease, and it is universally admitted by all who have been approached on the subject that the case was unmistakable in its character. It is also universally admitted that he owes his restored health to the above mentioned remedy.

Miller's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil did. He took it when at a low ebb, when his weight was less than 100 pounds. It created new blood for him and that combined with will power raised him up to a life of usefulness and happiness.
