A TURKISH WEDDING.

The Ceremony Occurs at Night and Occupies Four Hours.

A wedding is always an interesting event, even to those who are not directly concerned in it. Whereas the ceremony of "tying the knot" only takes a few minutes in Christian countries, it lasts in Cairo from 7 o'clock in the evening to 11, and is like enacting a chapter in the "Arabian Nights."

With difficulty we made our way to the gate of the large garden in front of the pasha's palace, the entire facade of which was brilliantly illuminated and within which the wedding ceremony was about to take place.

The ladies were immediately taken away from us and conducted to the harem, our men being shown into a room beside another reserved for the natives—men everywhere, but not a woman.

After awhile we were invited into the large dining hall, where we were rejoined by the ladies, but only the ladies of our own party, and all sat down to dinner. And such a dinner! I cannot give the menu.

What took place in the harem is best told by one of the ladies. She said: "I was ushered through a long, narrow stone passage, lighted by torches held by negroes, and suddenly found myself in a large room, the harem, brilliantly lighted by electricity, with a number of beautiful women with penciled eyebrows and red stained finger nails, lightly clad and unveiled, sitting on richly covered divans. Their costumes were of costly fabrics, and they were covered with diamonds and pearls.

"In the middle of the room was a bower of roses for the bride, and on all sides were rare oriental carpets and embroideries. After waiting an hour in the harem the bride appeared, walked to the bower and sat down in it. After another long wait the bridegroom came.

"He went directly to the bower, raised the veil of the bride, who was beautiful and whom he saw for the first time, placed a magnificent diamond necklace over her head and led her away. After this ceremony a procession formed in the garden and marched around it to the sound of music. Then the bridegroom's best man came out and made a speech on his behalf, which was replied to by one chosen for the purpose. After this the crowd began to disperse, and all was over.—Paris Herald.

A Logical Suggestion.

The venerable R. L. Dabney, D. D., is well known in this country and abroad Upward of 20 years ago his youngest son Lewis was a sharp witted lad who promised to become a respected "chip of the old block."

The lad was whipped one day for an act of disobedience and then had to undergo the more trying ordeal of sitting quietly on the sofa. He became deeply absorbed in thought and presently asked:

"Ma, why did you whip me?"

"So as to make you a better boy," was the response.

Lewis again became lost in thoughtful reflection. Presently he blurted out:

"Ma, do you believe in prayer?"

"Yes, my son."

"If you were to ask God to make me a better boy, do you think he would grant your prayer?"

"I think he would, son."

"Well, then, ma, I wish you would pray a little more and whip a little less."—St Louis Post-Dispatch

Horsepower.

Watt, the great improver of the steam engine, introduced into the vocabulary of machinists the term horsepower. When he first began the manufacture of steam engines, he experienced much difficulty in ascertaining from his distant customers what sized engine they required, and they were not less puzzled how to communicate to him the information. He was frequently guided, however, by their mentioning the number of horses which the engine ordered was designed to replace. Acting upon this hint, he ascertained by experiment that the very strongest of the London brewers' horses (animals of wonderful size and strength) could exert a force equivalent to raising 33,000 pounds one foot in a minute. This force he called one horsepower, and adopted it as the standard in regulating the size of steam engines. Now, not one horse in 100 is able to exert that degree of strength. A steam engine of ten horsepower can, in reality, do the work of about 20 horses. —New York Ledger.
