Education Of Eskimos Is Lagging

OTTAWA (CP) — Northern Affairs Minister Arthur Laing, returning from a three-week 7,000-mile tour of the Arctic regions, said he is disappointed with the progress of education among Eskimos in northern Quebec.

In an airport interview, he said the Eskimo people have learned that education is important to their advancement and are concerned about the future of northern education for the native children.

The minister, who never before visited Canada's Far North, said the western Arctic is growing rapidly and that he is praying that drillers will find oil in the central and eastern Arctic to make that area boom town.

On education problems in northern Quebec, Mr. Laing said he was disappointed at the progress made in the past. At Great Whale River, Que., on the southeastern shore of Hudson Bay, "we had to have three interpreters just five hours flying time from Ottawa." He said the most underdeveloped and primitive people he saw in the whole north country were at Great Whale River.

Britain's first offshore oil well is being drilled off the Dorset coast.
