Gloom

Of ill health, despondency and despair, gives way to the sunshine of hope, happiness and health, upon taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, because it gives renewed life and vitality to the blood, and through nerve strength, vigor and energy to the whole body. Read this letter:

"Hood's Sarsaparilla helped me wonderfully, changed sickness to health, gloom to sunshine. No pen can describe what I suffered. I was deathly sick, had sick headaches every few days and those terrible tired, despondent feelings, with heart troubles so that I could not go up and down stairs without clasping my hand over my heart and resting. In fact, it would almost take my breath away. I suffered so I did not care to live, yet I had much to live for. There is no pleasure in life if deprived of health, for life becomes a burden. Hood's Sarsaparilla does far more than advertised. After taking one bottle, it is sufficient to recommend itself." MRS. J. E. SMITH, Beloit, Iowa.

THE DELINEATOR.

The January number of the Delineator is called the Winter Holiday Number, and those who have not yet made choice of their holiday gifts will find helpful its record of what the shops have to offer in this line, as well as the review of new books, calendars and juvenile literature suitable for presentation. With the new year is begun a feature of personal interest to women in the series of "Talks On Beauty," by Dr. Grace Peckham Murray, a recognized authority on this subject. Mrs. Mary Cadwalader Jones gives a comprehensive glance at "Social Life in America," treating of the big cities. At the Bayou, by T. C. deLeon, is a short story of the South, by one of its best known writers, and the division of the income is a suggestive consideration of how to make both ends meet financially. Mrs. A. B. Longstreet furnishes a readable biographical sketch of Miss Stimson, the noted Maine mill-owner and lumber dealer. In her rehearsal of the six important days in a woman's life, Maud C. Murray Miller describes the debut in society. Emma Haywood tells how to embroider fancy screens, and there is an article on the Mountellick work now so popular. Mrs. Witherspoon's January tea-table chat, Mr Vick's flower garden and the pages devoted to seasonable crockery will all be found entertaining, as will also the usual departments of knitting tatting; lace-making, etc. A subscription to this sterling magazine for a year will be a present to be appreciated. Address communications to The Delineator Publishing company, of Toronto, Ltd., 33 Richmond Street, West, Toronto, or the local agent for the Butterick Patterns. Subscription price of the Delineator, $1.00 per year, or 15 cents per single copy.

HILLSBOROUGH DAIRYING COMPANY.

A Splendid Showing For Last Year—Pleased With Their Cheese Maker.

Hillsborough Dairying Company has just had a general statement printed giving a creditable summary of the past season's work, which is a very creditable statement indeed.

The amount of milk received during the season was 1,163,153 lbs. The amount of cheese manufactured was 111,751 lbs. The cost of manufacture per lb was 1 67 cents. The average price realized per lb was 9.09 cents. The average price paid for milk was 71 31 cents per hundred lbs.

The cheese maker employed during the season was Mr. Fraser Morrow. Although a young man, he has proved to be a remarkable good cheese maker, and has given the company entire satisfaction. The neatness and order maintained in the factory throughout the season, may have been equalled by a few cheese makers on the Island, but certainly excelled by none.

The finances of the company also are in a very satisfactory condition. The building and cheese plant are entirely free of debt. It is proposed to put in a butter plant at an early date, probably in the spring, in time to make the patrons summer butter before the cheese season begins.

STANHOPE SCHOOL EXAMINATION.

The semi-annual examination of Stanhope school was held on Wednesday, the 23rd inst., in the presence of a goodly number of parents and visitors; and, thanks to the kindness and generosity of Mr. and Mrs. George Longworth, it proved quite an interesting event.

The examination was conducted by the teacher, Miss Bessie L. Carr, assisted by Mr. Alfred C. Lawson and proved very satisfactory. The marked progress made by the pupils during the past year under the efficient management of the present teacher was remarked upon by more than one of the visitors.

The distribution of prizes presented by Mr. and Mrs. Longworth was especially interesting to the pupils. A large number of very valuable prizes was given for the older scholars, besides a host of smaller prizes for the younger ones. None were forgotten and, to wind up the entertainment, all went home happy. A bucket of candy, the gift of Miss Longworth, was distributed among the children. A unanimous vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. and Mrs. Longworth and Miss Longworth, for their kindness in making this X'mas one of the happiest in the experience of the school.

The teacher wishes us to convey an expression of her gratitude for the beautiful present sent by Mrs. Longworth, in kindly remembrance of herself on the same occasion.

A SENSATIONAL CRIME.

Worthy of the Pen of a Balzac or a Dickens.

A Paris correspondent writes: The murder of the Baroness de Valley promises to be one of the most sensational crimes of the year, not so much from the fact of the lady having been murdered for the purposes of robbery as because of the extraordinary life she had led, a description of which would be worthy of the pen of a Balzac or a Dickens.

I was enabled to visit her apartment in the Rue de Penthievre in company with the police. It consisted of four small rooms looking on to a courtyard. In every room the utmost disorder reigned. Heaps of old and filthy rags were strewn about amidst objects of art of real value; upon the walls were pictures painted by masters, amongst them one of the victim in ball dress at the age of twenty, which shows that she must have been a most beautiful woman.

Upon enquiring, I was enabled to learn the following details: She had a fortune of about 20,000 francs a year, besides being owner of a chateau in Poitou and a villa at Colombes, and yet she was so avaricious that she did not keep a regular servant and never paid more than £40 a year rental. Like most misers, she was very distrustful, and would do anything in order to save a few francs. It was thus she had come into relations with a number of people of doubtful character, who acted as intermediaries in her money lending business.

It has been discovered that a plan had already been laid to assassinate her by some acrobats, who were arrested some time ago for drunkenness and disorderly conduct at a fair, and upon them was found a plan of the Baroness de Valley's apartment.

Baroness de Valley was the daughter of M. de Montbel, who was Minister under the Restoration. She was born in 1814, and the events of her life had filled a page of history. She was considered one of the most beautiful women of the court of Louis Philippe, an excellent musician, and had a remarkable voice. She was married once, but became a widow after six months. She had twins, who died very young. It may have been these early troubles which led her to live apart from her relatives and in the manner I have described.

During the bombardment and siege of Tangiers she was charged by the Prince de Joinville with a mission to the grand vizier of Morocco, on account of the affectionate relations she had with the wife of the African Minister.

It seems that the signing of peace, or at least the basis of that signing, was the result of that interview. When only sixteen years old she started a paper, in connection with Georges Sand, called La Violette. It is related of her that in 1870, whilst at Wiesbaden, a Prussian officer proposed a toast to celebrate the fall of Metz. The baroness, who was present, indignant at the insult to her country, smacked the officer's face.

She was related to the families of Larochefoucauld-Mortemart, the Marchioness de Courcy and Dr. Favreau.

The concierge told me that yesterday morning she went out as usual to buy her breakfast, accompanied by her two dogs, her only friends. While she was absent two men of doubtful aspect called to ask for her. Being informed of her absence they left, to return after 10 o'clock. They were seen to leave the house about 11. This did not cause much surprise, on account of the strange class of visitors daily received by the baroness. About the same moment a coachman, who was washing his carriage in a courtyard, heard the baroness' two dogs howling furiously, but he did not pay particular attention to the fact, as it was of common occurrence. These two men are supposed to have been the murderers. Her most frequent visitor was a young man named Charles Laguenie, whom she had to a certain extent taken under her protection. He was supposed to be the son of one of her former servants. She had changed her apartment six times in eight years, never taking one with a higher rental than that in which she died. Each time she changed her lodgings her furniture was removed by commissionaires on trucks, to save the expense of an ordinary removal van.

Notwithstanding her avarice, the baroness was sometimes duped. Some months ago one of her clients borrowed a necklace of pearls on the pretence of showing it to a jeweler who would give her a price for it. When it was returned unsold the majority of the pearls had been replaced by false ones.

The Age of Perfection.

The costume of the woman cyclist remains the unsolved problem of society and trade. Fortune, if not fame, awaits the designer of a garb that will insure safety, while it preserves the modesty and grace with which tradition still happily enshrines the fairest of creation.

The bicycle academies and the boulevards furnish lamentable revelations of the ineffectiveness of necessity or art to devise to date a costume befitting wheel and rider. To such extremes has individual fancy violated good taste and common decency that a woman becomingly attired rarely fails to attract attention. Indeed, so flagrant has become the abuse of bicycle toilettes that many sensitive, self-respecting women have been driven from the public thoroughfare and forced to forego the pleasure altogether. Exclusive society women are now rarely found on a wheel save in the suburbs. Their costume has little in common with those met on the boulevards.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Science's Explanation of Moonlight.

"The moon is a mirror which reflects the sunlight to us," writes Alden W. Quimby in Ladies' Home Journal. "An examination of moonlight with the spectroscope shows, of course, the same spectrum as that of sunlight. The quality of the reflection is indicated in the announcement that it would take no fewer than six hundred and eighteen thousand full moons to supply to us an amount of light equal to that which we get from the sun, and there is only sky room for, say, seventy-five thousand of them. Some heat comes from the moon, but ordinary methods will not measure it. However, it is calculated that it is about one eighty thousandth of the amount which the sun supplies to us. The inclination of the moon's orbit to the horizon accounts for the "Harvest" and the "Hunter's" moon, which occur when the tipping is slightest, thus permitting the moon to rise about the same time for several successive evenings. The moon often appears much enlarged when on the horizon, but this is caused by the refractive feature of the air about the horizon and the natural tendency to compare it with terrestrial objects."

What Wears the Brain.

The brain is capable of a great deal of continuous labor in so far as its exercise is that of mere construction—in other words, so long as the work it does is original. For in that way the brain is working freely, in full accord with its own fancy, as it were, and therefore is not likely to tire soon. Take as a corresponding illustration the use of the voice. So long as it is natural, and not forced by artificialities, it may be called upon for hours together, simply because it is used naturally. Original work of the brain is natural work, and the parallel holds true here. When, however, one is reproducing acquired knowledge, the brain is put to an extra strain, having not merely to be exercised in constructive work, which is its ordinary function, but also having to traverse through the memory, and make a selection of the knowledge stored in the brain.

NERVOUS Troubles are due to impoverished blood. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the One True Blood Purifier and NERVE TONIC.

THE GREAT BUSTARD.

It Has Been Extinct in England for More Than Fifty Years.

The great bustard formerly haunted all the level counties of England, and was particularly common on Salisbury plain. From the reign of Henry VIII. repeated measures were passed in order to protect it; and it is expressly included under the head of game in the statute of the first year of the reign of William IV., which codified and reformed the laws relating to game. The close season for bustard shooting was and is from the first of March to the first of September. But the native bustard is now extinct in England. The last was killed at Swaffham, in Norfolk, in 1838. Any that have been shot since have been merely casual visitors, probably coming from the plains of Saxony. The causes of the disappearance of the bustard are, firstly, the sport they afforded, for they were hunted with greyhounds as well as shot; secondly, the increase in the amount of cultivated land. This largest of European birds, weighing as much as thirty pounds, could no longer find any sufficient support on the closely cropped plains of England.

Women's Ways.

"Have you registered?" one citizen was overheard inquiring of another.

"Registered what?"

"Registered to vote."

"No, I have not."

"But aren't you going to?"

"No, I am not."

"Don't you intend to vote?"

"What can I vote for?"

"School officers, and so on," said the gentle chirper.

"I think it is a privilege that we women have something to say in such matters."

"I don't. I don't call any sop a privilege. If my husand inverted Bluebeard's plan and gave me one little room in the house and kept me out of all the others, I shouldn't cackle very loud about my privileges. I shouldn't let a man know I wanted to vote. I merely reserve the right of censorship over him while he votes. It infuriates me to see women rushing to the polls to deposit ballots on school matters, as if they hadn't brains enough to comprehend anything apart from the rearing of children. Am I going to eat anybody else's apple core? Do I want to chew his gum while he rests his jaws? Let him get down on all fours and prostrate himself before me. When I vote Mr. Man will bring me an unrestricted ballot on a salver and say with his best bow, 'Madame, will you do us the favor to go the polls with us?'

"O, my dear, he'll never do it."

"Then let him keep his ballot to himself."

"But there are more issues than personal feeling at stake. Of course those who are interested in public affairs would like to be treated handsomely—"

"If there is one thing the American woman has learned, it is to make men treat her handsomely. Our men are the best trained in the world—the loveliest, the most adorable—really the most self-sacrificing. But in order to keep them so we must stay off what they in their stupidity consider their own ground. Let them claim it; we own them. Do you think I am going to come down in the esteem of these fellows we have taken so much pains to subdue by trying to run a little side show to their big circus election? Decidedly no, madame. They are welcome to their ballot. But I shall be sorry for them after we get through with them if they don't vote to suit us."

The common person, having this talk forced on his ears, meditated about the perverseness of women and their inability to appreciate that opening wedge called a concession.

Though, of course, we have the best trained women in the world—the loveliest, the most adorable—really the most self-sacrificing.

What is Life?

What is life? A subject inexhaustible. We come into life, not of our own choice, but by the will of the Almighty, Creator of all life. We look upon the foliage which appears with the warm rays of sunshine in the spring of the year; and then, in turn, when shivering blasts of winter come, all that has been life withers and dies to all external appearances. But, is that life extinct? No, not dead—but slumbering, cared for by the Ruler of the Universe. So would I liken the human life to that of the slumbering foliage. We live and for a purpose; we die and for a purpose. Man, the superior of all that has life, endowed with all our ever-loving God can give to the human life, or that which we may wish for, unless it be a keener sight so that we may penetrate the clouds and the heavens, that we might see beyond the scope of our present comprehensions. It would be needless to add, that would bring about a chaos unwelcomed, indeed. Therefore, we are not content to live, but to live is not all that we were intended for There is a wide field in which to make life what we live for. We see the infant in the mother's arms fondled with all the love and care that only a mother can give, that the little one may live to become a useful member of the community and a comfort to the parent; and yet, without a moment's warning, the innocent babe, too young to have sinned, withers and dies, like the foliage, gone back to mother earth again—and this we call life.

We see the young just entering upon their career in life, with such bright prospects; some wandering far from the path which they might have trod with honor—a life's long sorrow to the loving parents. This, we call life, but it must be said, without living. Then, again, there are those who seem never to wander from the right path, with success just within their grasp, the promise of a long and useful life, a benefactor to their fellow-beings; when, at last, that little spark which is called life, suddenly begins to flicker, and goes out, like a stripling of a tree snapped in twain by the winds, as though it were but a reed, The aged parent weeps, and we wonder, what is life? when all that we love is taken from us and returned to earth again. Then, in more somber thoughts, we draw upon our imagination the picture of an ideal life. They who bring sunshine into every home and whose very presence seems to illuminate the darkness of the unfortunate by seeking the careworn and needy, bestowing beneficence with a liberal hand. Happy are they in their good doing.—D. W. D.

FRESH GROUND Coffee

Coffee loses its aroma and strength very quickly after being roasted and ground. In order to give our customert the very best value, we have a Coffee Roaster fitted up on our premises, where we roass green Coffee every two or three weeks, and having also the largest mill in the city in our store, we grind it every day as required for our trade.
