

HAPPENINGS

Mr. and Mrs. James Barnett and three children P.M. Joan Barnett of Moncton, N.B. have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. A.J. MacPherson...

Mr. Louis Pilote of Halifax and son David have returned to Halifax after a months vacation spent at Kilmuir.

Miss D.P. MacPherson of Montreal, formerly of Kilmuir is visiting her sisters Mrs. A.C. Mackay and Mrs. Mott MacLean, Montague.

Mrs. Bessie MacBeth, Mrs. Mary McGowan, Montague R.R. Mrs. Margaret Mun, Murray River and Mrs. Leith McCarron, St. Mary's Road are attending summer school classes at Prince of Wales College.

Miss Janet Simmons of Camp Borden, Ont., is visiting her cousins, Mrs. Catherine, Elizabeth and Sandra McKim. Central 16.

Mr. J. P. McGachen, Victoria, B. C. is visiting her cousins, Mrs. Robert Hooper and Mrs. C. R. Birt, at "Happy Haven," Rusticville.

KEEP IN TRIM

Planning Ahead Makes Slimming Course Easier

By Ida Jean Kain A homemaker who wishes herself a slimmer is advised to plan ahead...

When you plan in advance, then the actual doing is not a tremendous job. Technically you are pre-established through planning, a pathway in the nervous system which aids your mind to subsequently respond.

When you plan in advance, then the actual doing is not a tremendous job. Technically you are pre-established through planning, a pathway in the nervous system which aids your mind to subsequently respond.

When you plan in advance, then the actual doing is not a tremendous job. Technically you are pre-established through planning, a pathway in the nervous system which aids your mind to subsequently respond.

When you plan in advance, then the actual doing is not a tremendous job. Technically you are pre-established through planning, a pathway in the nervous system which aids your mind to subsequently respond.

When you plan in advance, then the actual doing is not a tremendous job. Technically you are pre-established through planning, a pathway in the nervous system which aids your mind to subsequently respond.

When you plan in advance, then the actual doing is not a tremendous job. Technically you are pre-established through planning, a pathway in the nervous system which aids your mind to subsequently respond.

When you plan in advance, then the actual doing is not a tremendous job. Technically you are pre-established through planning, a pathway in the nervous system which aids your mind to subsequently respond.

When you plan in advance, then the actual doing is not a tremendous job. Technically you are pre-established through planning, a pathway in the nervous system which aids your mind to subsequently respond.

When you plan in advance, then the actual doing is not a tremendous job. Technically you are pre-established through planning, a pathway in the nervous system which aids your mind to subsequently respond.

When you plan in advance, then the actual doing is not a tremendous job. Technically you are pre-established through planning, a pathway in the nervous system which aids your mind to subsequently respond.

When you plan in advance, then the actual doing is not a tremendous job. Technically you are pre-established through planning, a pathway in the nervous system which aids your mind to subsequently respond.

When you plan in advance, then the actual doing is not a tremendous job. Technically you are pre-established through planning, a pathway in the nervous system which aids your mind to subsequently respond.

When you plan in advance, then the actual doing is not a tremendous job. Technically you are pre-established through planning, a pathway in the nervous system which aids your mind to subsequently respond.

When you plan in advance, then the actual doing is not a tremendous job. Technically you are pre-established through planning, a pathway in the nervous system which aids your mind to subsequently respond.

When you plan in advance, then the actual doing is not a tremendous job. Technically you are pre-established through planning, a pathway in the nervous system which aids your mind to subsequently respond.

When you plan in advance, then the actual doing is not a tremendous job. Technically you are pre-established through planning, a pathway in the nervous system which aids your mind to subsequently respond.

When you plan in advance, then the actual doing is not a tremendous job. Technically you are pre-established through planning, a pathway in the nervous system which aids your mind to subsequently respond.

When you plan in advance, then the actual doing is not a tremendous job. Technically you are pre-established through planning, a pathway in the nervous system which aids your mind to subsequently respond.

When you plan in advance, then the actual doing is not a tremendous job. Technically you are pre-established through planning, a pathway in the nervous system which aids your mind to subsequently respond.

WOMEN'S ORGANIZATIONS

Bible Quiz Conducted At St. Mark's W.A.

Mrs. Nelson Paynter was hostess for the Bible Quiz conducted at the July meeting of St. Mark's Anglican W.A.

The president, Mrs. E. M. E. Moss occupied the chair and the devotional prayer was led by Mrs. Wilma Gillis.

Lunch committee Mrs. M. N. MacPherson, Mrs. A. N. MacPherson, Mrs. Simon Campbell and Miss Anne MacDonald.

The monthly meeting of the W.A. of St. Mark's was held on July 9th in Dalton School.

The meeting was presided over by Mrs. Evelyn Skerry.

The director gave a brief talk and commented on the weekly report, on the attendance of everyone at the missions and on the minutes of the Annual Meeting.

Meeting closed with the act of consecration to the blessed Virgin.

Mrs. J.G. Townsend presented a very interesting quiz on women's Bible.

Mrs. Harold Mill invited the ladies to the June 18th August meeting when Mrs. Albert Stafford will be in charge of the study book.

The hostess was assisted in serving by Mrs. Cecil Mill.

PRINCETON ROAD U.C.W. Janie MacEwen was hostess to the members of the Princeton Road U.C.W.

The meeting was called to order by Mrs. Edith Crabbe then charge of the worship service.

The hymn "Trust and Obey" followed by prayer closed the worship service.

The business of the meeting was then conducted by the president.

Roll call was responded to by 15 members reading from Romans 11th chapter.

It was moved and seconded that a box of food be sent to the Protestant Welfare Bureau.

Friendship secretary reported eight home calls and 18 hospital calls during the month.

Lunch was served by the hostess assisted by three members of the group.

KILMUR W. I. Mrs. Russell Dowse, Charlottetown, entertained the members of Kilmuir Institute at her home in July.

The secretary, Mrs. A. N. MacPherson presiding, the meeting opened by repeating the Mary Stewart collection.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved with a "new receipt".

A report of the Heartbeater district convention was given by Mrs. M. N. MacGowan.

Concordance was read by the secretary.

Prayers were read by the secretary.

Prayers were read by the secretary.

Prayers were read by the secretary.

Prayers were read by the secretary.

Prayers were read by the secretary.

Prayers were read by the secretary.

Prayers were read by the secretary.

Prayers were read by the secretary.

a balance on hand of $88.07. Generous gifts were given to the president...

Entertainment received serving a breakfast to the graduates and lunch to guests in the evening...

The press convenor reported that accounts for the past other activities have been published.

Radio and T.V. asked that the guide for shows being held in church by Rev. Sr. Superior be followed.

Mrs. Evelyn Skerry gave an interesting account of the Annual Convention she had attended.

The director gave a brief talk and commented on the weekly report, on the attendance of everyone at the missions and on the minutes of the Annual Meeting.

Meeting closed with the act of consecration to the blessed Virgin.

Mrs. J.G. Townsend presented a very interesting quiz on women's Bible.

Mrs. Harold Mill invited the ladies to the June 18th August meeting when Mrs. Albert Stafford will be in charge of the study book.

The hostess was assisted in serving by Mrs. Cecil Mill.

PRINCETON ROAD U.C.W. Janie MacEwen was hostess to the members of the Princeton Road U.C.W.

The meeting was called to order by Mrs. Edith Crabbe then charge of the worship service.

The hymn "Trust and Obey" followed by prayer closed the worship service.

The business of the meeting was then conducted by the president.

Roll call was responded to by 15 members reading from Romans 11th chapter.

It was moved and seconded that a box of food be sent to the Protestant Welfare Bureau.

Friendship secretary reported eight home calls and 18 hospital calls during the month.

Lunch was served by the hostess assisted by three members of the group.

KILMUR W. I. Mrs. Russell Dowse, Charlottetown, entertained the members of Kilmuir Institute at her home in July.

The secretary, Mrs. A. N. MacPherson presiding, the meeting opened by repeating the Mary Stewart collection.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved with a "new receipt".

A report of the Heartbeater district convention was given by Mrs. M. N. MacGowan.

Concordance was read by the secretary.

Prayers were read by the secretary.

Prayers were read by the secretary.

Prayers were read by the secretary.

Prayers were read by the secretary.

Prayers were read by the secretary.

Prayers were read by the secretary.

Prayers were read by the secretary.

Prayers were read by the secretary.

Prayers were read by the secretary.

Prayers were read by the secretary.

LARANE JAMESON BERNARD CRAWFORD ENGAGEMENT ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. John W. Jameson, Panmure Island, wishes to announce the engagement of his only daughter Loraine to Bernard Patrick Crawford, son of Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Crawford, Glace Bay, Nova Scotia.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Brush Burning Occupies Farm Folk At Alderlea

We tucked away in the waiting truck, the arduous of dry sticks we had gathered on our way down from a piece of stumped this evening.

"See what I bought today in town - to be a souvenir of your island," a pretty young miss, a visitor with her also - attractive mother, from the Quebec stump we had known down the years, a landmark along a trail through the woods of once.

"We live and what will you do with it?" another guest questioned. "We live in an over-size lot, a village," she replied.

"There was too much pasture in the small field there for my saddle horse, so we added four sheep to the flock. One of those," she chuckled, "will shortly find herself wearing this island - bell!"

And following the tones of the cowbell we would find in some glade the cows that nice long ago. Presently, the Ayrshire with wide - spread horns, the bell - cow, would lead the little procession down the paths to the gray bars which let them to the farm lane and home.

We gathered the silver pieces this evening on a stump from which the forests of the past had receded having taken a bite by bit through the years to enable fields in a row toward further clearing, the farmers were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering.

They were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering. They were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering.

"That will make a nice field, Ellen - some day," James said, looking back to the glows in the twilight as the little truck faced home. Night now, we have, a respected item among other tokens of the past, we count among the treasures of the farm.

"What was that used for?" a young'un who questioned. "It was attached by a wide strap to a cow's neck, so the herd could be found at such times as they pastured in the woodland," we reply.

"Oh, I see!" But how could he picture, even by a great stretch of his young imagination those days so far gone? The quiet times, with the horse - drawn vehicles and implements, and all those quiet scenes which were part of their early days of those years?

So we would listen and then follow the notes of the bell. "See what I bought today in town - to be a souvenir of your island," a pretty young miss, a visitor with her also - attractive mother, from the Quebec stump we had known down the years, a landmark along a trail through the woods of once.

"We live and what will you do with it?" another guest questioned. "We live in an over-size lot, a village," she replied. "There was too much pasture in the small field there for my saddle horse, so we added four sheep to the flock. One of those," she chuckled, "will shortly find herself wearing this island - bell!"

And following the tones of the cowbell we would find in some glade the cows that nice long ago. Presently, the Ayrshire with wide - spread horns, the bell - cow, would lead the little procession down the paths to the gray bars which let them to the farm lane and home.

We gathered the silver pieces this evening on a stump from which the forests of the past had receded having taken a bite by bit through the years to enable fields in a row toward further clearing, the farmers were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering.

They were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering. They were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering.

"That will make a nice field, Ellen - some day," James said, looking back to the glows in the twilight as the little truck faced home. Night now, we have, a respected item among other tokens of the past, we count among the treasures of the farm.

"What was that used for?" a young'un who questioned. "It was attached by a wide strap to a cow's neck, so the herd could be found at such times as they pastured in the woodland," we reply.

"Oh, I see!" But how could he picture, even by a great stretch of his young imagination those days so far gone? The quiet times, with the horse - drawn vehicles and implements, and all those quiet scenes which were part of their early days of those years?

So we would listen and then follow the notes of the bell. "See what I bought today in town - to be a souvenir of your island," a pretty young miss, a visitor with her also - attractive mother, from the Quebec stump we had known down the years, a landmark along a trail through the woods of once.

"We live and what will you do with it?" another guest questioned. "We live in an over-size lot, a village," she replied. "There was too much pasture in the small field there for my saddle horse, so we added four sheep to the flock. One of those," she chuckled, "will shortly find herself wearing this island - bell!"

And following the tones of the cowbell we would find in some glade the cows that nice long ago. Presently, the Ayrshire with wide - spread horns, the bell - cow, would lead the little procession down the paths to the gray bars which let them to the farm lane and home.

We gathered the silver pieces this evening on a stump from which the forests of the past had receded having taken a bite by bit through the years to enable fields in a row toward further clearing, the farmers were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering.

They were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering. They were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering.

"That will make a nice field, Ellen - some day," James said, looking back to the glows in the twilight as the little truck faced home. Night now, we have, a respected item among other tokens of the past, we count among the treasures of the farm.

LARANE JAMESON BERNARD CRAWFORD ENGAGEMENT ANNOUNCEMENT

ELLEN'S DIARY

Brush Burning Occupies Farm Folk At Alderlea

We tucked away in the waiting truck, the arduous of dry sticks we had gathered on our way down from a piece of stumped this evening.

"See what I bought today in town - to be a souvenir of your island," a pretty young miss, a visitor with her also - attractive mother, from the Quebec stump we had known down the years, a landmark along a trail through the woods of once.

"We live and what will you do with it?" another guest questioned. "We live in an over-size lot, a village," she replied.

"There was too much pasture in the small field there for my saddle horse, so we added four sheep to the flock. One of those," she chuckled, "will shortly find herself wearing this island - bell!"

And following the tones of the cowbell we would find in some glade the cows that nice long ago. Presently, the Ayrshire with wide - spread horns, the bell - cow, would lead the little procession down the paths to the gray bars which let them to the farm lane and home.

We gathered the silver pieces this evening on a stump from which the forests of the past had receded having taken a bite by bit through the years to enable fields in a row toward further clearing, the farmers were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering.

They were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering. They were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering.

"That will make a nice field, Ellen - some day," James said, looking back to the glows in the twilight as the little truck faced home. Night now, we have, a respected item among other tokens of the past, we count among the treasures of the farm.

"What was that used for?" a young'un who questioned. "It was attached by a wide strap to a cow's neck, so the herd could be found at such times as they pastured in the woodland," we reply.

"Oh, I see!" But how could he picture, even by a great stretch of his young imagination those days so far gone? The quiet times, with the horse - drawn vehicles and implements, and all those quiet scenes which were part of their early days of those years?

So we would listen and then follow the notes of the bell. "See what I bought today in town - to be a souvenir of your island," a pretty young miss, a visitor with her also - attractive mother, from the Quebec stump we had known down the years, a landmark along a trail through the woods of once.

"We live and what will you do with it?" another guest questioned. "We live in an over-size lot, a village," she replied. "There was too much pasture in the small field there for my saddle horse, so we added four sheep to the flock. One of those," she chuckled, "will shortly find herself wearing this island - bell!"

And following the tones of the cowbell we would find in some glade the cows that nice long ago. Presently, the Ayrshire with wide - spread horns, the bell - cow, would lead the little procession down the paths to the gray bars which let them to the farm lane and home.

We gathered the silver pieces this evening on a stump from which the forests of the past had receded having taken a bite by bit through the years to enable fields in a row toward further clearing, the farmers were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering.

They were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering. They were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering.

"That will make a nice field, Ellen - some day," James said, looking back to the glows in the twilight as the little truck faced home. Night now, we have, a respected item among other tokens of the past, we count among the treasures of the farm.

"What was that used for?" a young'un who questioned. "It was attached by a wide strap to a cow's neck, so the herd could be found at such times as they pastured in the woodland," we reply.

"Oh, I see!" But how could he picture, even by a great stretch of his young imagination those days so far gone? The quiet times, with the horse - drawn vehicles and implements, and all those quiet scenes which were part of their early days of those years?

So we would listen and then follow the notes of the bell. "See what I bought today in town - to be a souvenir of your island," a pretty young miss, a visitor with her also - attractive mother, from the Quebec stump we had known down the years, a landmark along a trail through the woods of once.

"We live and what will you do with it?" another guest questioned. "We live in an over-size lot, a village," she replied. "There was too much pasture in the small field there for my saddle horse, so we added four sheep to the flock. One of those," she chuckled, "will shortly find herself wearing this island - bell!"

And following the tones of the cowbell we would find in some glade the cows that nice long ago. Presently, the Ayrshire with wide - spread horns, the bell - cow, would lead the little procession down the paths to the gray bars which let them to the farm lane and home.

We gathered the silver pieces this evening on a stump from which the forests of the past had receded having taken a bite by bit through the years to enable fields in a row toward further clearing, the farmers were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering.

They were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering. They were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering.

"That will make a nice field, Ellen - some day," James said, looking back to the glows in the twilight as the little truck faced home. Night now, we have, a respected item among other tokens of the past, we count among the treasures of the farm.

LARANE JAMESON BERNARD CRAWFORD ENGAGEMENT ANNOUNCEMENT

ELLEN'S DIARY

Brush Burning Occupies Farm Folk At Alderlea

We tucked away in the waiting truck, the arduous of dry sticks we had gathered on our way down from a piece of stumped this evening.

"See what I bought today in town - to be a souvenir of your island," a pretty young miss, a visitor with her also - attractive mother, from the Quebec stump we had known down the years, a landmark along a trail through the woods of once.

"We live and what will you do with it?" another guest questioned. "We live in an over-size lot, a village," she replied.

"There was too much pasture in the small field there for my saddle horse, so we added four sheep to the flock. One of those," she chuckled, "will shortly find herself wearing this island - bell!"

And following the tones of the cowbell we would find in some glade the cows that nice long ago. Presently, the Ayrshire with wide - spread horns, the bell - cow, would lead the little procession down the paths to the gray bars which let them to the farm lane and home.

We gathered the silver pieces this evening on a stump from which the forests of the past had receded having taken a bite by bit through the years to enable fields in a row toward further clearing, the farmers were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering.

They were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering. They were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering.

"That will make a nice field, Ellen - some day," James said, looking back to the glows in the twilight as the little truck faced home. Night now, we have, a respected item among other tokens of the past, we count among the treasures of the farm.

"What was that used for?" a young'un who questioned. "It was attached by a wide strap to a cow's neck, so the herd could be found at such times as they pastured in the woodland," we reply.

"Oh, I see!" But how could he picture, even by a great stretch of his young imagination those days so far gone? The quiet times, with the horse - drawn vehicles and implements, and all those quiet scenes which were part of their early days of those years?

So we would listen and then follow the notes of the bell. "See what I bought today in town - to be a souvenir of your island," a pretty young miss, a visitor with her also - attractive mother, from the Quebec stump we had known down the years, a landmark along a trail through the woods of once.

"We live and what will you do with it?" another guest questioned. "We live in an over-size lot, a village," she replied. "There was too much pasture in the small field there for my saddle horse, so we added four sheep to the flock. One of those," she chuckled, "will shortly find herself wearing this island - bell!"

And following the tones of the cowbell we would find in some glade the cows that nice long ago. Presently, the Ayrshire with wide - spread horns, the bell - cow, would lead the little procession down the paths to the gray bars which let them to the farm lane and home.

We gathered the silver pieces this evening on a stump from which the forests of the past had receded having taken a bite by bit through the years to enable fields in a row toward further clearing, the farmers were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering.

They were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering. They were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering.

"That will make a nice field, Ellen - some day," James said, looking back to the glows in the twilight as the little truck faced home. Night now, we have, a respected item among other tokens of the past, we count among the treasures of the farm.

"What was that used for?" a young'un who questioned. "It was attached by a wide strap to a cow's neck, so the herd could be found at such times as they pastured in the woodland," we reply.

"Oh, I see!" But how could he picture, even by a great stretch of his young imagination those days so far gone? The quiet times, with the horse - drawn vehicles and implements, and all those quiet scenes which were part of their early days of those years?

So we would listen and then follow the notes of the bell. "See what I bought today in town - to be a souvenir of your island," a pretty young miss, a visitor with her also - attractive mother, from the Quebec stump we had known down the years, a landmark along a trail through the woods of once.

"We live and what will you do with it?" another guest questioned. "We live in an over-size lot, a village," she replied. "There was too much pasture in the small field there for my saddle horse, so we added four sheep to the flock. One of those," she chuckled, "will shortly find herself wearing this island - bell!"

And following the tones of the cowbell we would find in some glade the cows that nice long ago. Presently, the Ayrshire with wide - spread horns, the bell - cow, would lead the little procession down the paths to the gray bars which let them to the farm lane and home.

We gathered the silver pieces this evening on a stump from which the forests of the past had receded having taken a bite by bit through the years to enable fields in a row toward further clearing, the farmers were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering.

They were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering. They were burning those heaps of brush that still remained from last spring's fuel gathering.

"That will make a nice field, Ellen - some day," James said, looking back to the glows in the twilight as the little truck faced home. Night now, we have, a respected item among other tokens of the past, we count among the treasures of the farm.

LARANE JAMESON BERNARD CRAWFORD ENGAGEMENT ANNOUNCEMENT

ELLEN'S DIARY

Brush Burning Occupies Farm Folk At Alderlea

We tucked away in the waiting truck, the arduous of dry sticks we had gathered on our way down from a piece of stumped this evening.

"See what I bought today in town - to be a souvenir of your island," a pretty young miss, a visitor with her also - attractive mother, from the Quebec stump we had known down the years, a landmark along a trail through the woods of once.

"We live and what will you do with it?" another guest questioned. "We live in an over-size lot, a village," she replied.

"There was too much pasture in the small field there for my saddle horse, so we added four