THE SAGE OF CHINA.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE AND TIMES OF CONFUCIUS.

From a Worldly Point of View His Life a Failure, Yet His Tomb is Venerated After the Lapse of Twenty-Three Centuries.

From a worldly point of view the life of Confucius was a failure. His father, after divorcing his first wife, at the age of seventy married a young lady who became the mother of Confucius, 550 B. C. Dying when the little boy was three years old, he left his family in straitened circumstances. Poverty is an excellent training-ground, and in later life Confucius was wont to admit that he owed much to his early experience.

As to his marriage, according to the custom of his nation, before he was twenty, he was compelled to accept a post as keeper of stores and superintendent of pastures and herds. These un congenial duties he conscientiously fulfilled for the support of his wife and child, and we may gather a hint of his character from the testimony of Mencius as to his education in such work. Through all his teaching there runs a note of thoroughness. "Sincerity" is his motto. "Sincerity" is his motto. "Sincerity" is his motto. "Sincerity" is his motto.

When in your chamber, 'neath thy light Maintain your conscience pure and bright. These are his teachings, and he was not grown beyond them even in the nineteenth century. The natural bent of his mind was toward ethics and his childhood years. When only five or six he played at sacrifices and practiced the duties enjoined at ceremonies, for which the Chinese have a peculiarly elaborate ritual. As early as fifteen his mind was set upon learning, and it must have been a supreme joy to him in his twenty-second year to commence his work as a teacher. At this stage of his career he was full of enthusiasm and hope; he saw the evils of his day and set himself to remedy them.

It was a troublous time in Chinese history. State was warring against state, corruption and disorder reigned everywhere; it was a period of general degeneracy. Confucius believed that he had a mission from heaven to teach the true principles of human duty and of government. In this belief he never wavered, and during one of his administrations under the Marquis of Lu he tried to put his principles into effect. He was the idol of the people, and flew in songs through their mouths. "But it did not last. The other states grew jealous of the prosperity of Lu, and plotted for the overthrow of the reformer. When Confucius saw that he had fallen away from his post, but to the suggestion of his disciples that his principles were too rigid and should be softened a little he nobly replied: "A good husbandman can sow, but he cannot secure a harvest; an artisan may excel in handicraft, but cannot produce a market for his goods; and in the same way a superior man can cultivate his principles, but he cannot make them acceptable."

Of the personal appearance of this great man some traditional details have survived, but it is hardly likely that they are very accurate after the lapse of twenty-three centuries. Of his characteristics we have more reliable evidence in his actions and words. His sincerity has been alluded to, he was also eminent for his moral and physical courage. A noble by descent, he never appears to have used this fact for his own advantage. In order to maintain his position of Confucius, we must try and understand the China to which he came. It was a time of long-continued anarchy, for five centuries the throne had been unsettled. Social conditions were bad; political and private morality were at their lowest, and to religion they were absolutely indifferent. Mencius tells us that "the world had fallen into decay and right principles had disappeared when Confucius undertook the work of reformation."

From times as far back as the Deluge the Chinese had written records. History and poetry, interspersed with philosophy and morality, had preserved religion in the past, and it was to these records that the sage addressed himself. In trying to estimate him truly, we must not compare his teachings with those of the New Testament, but with those of his contemporaries who wrote in the Old, and we must not forget that the Bible itself supplies us with illustrations of the same use of the word "Heaven" when Daniel says to Nebuchadnezzar, "Thou shalt know that the heavens do rule," and in the confession of the Prodigal, "I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight." In the Confucian system rewards and punishments are meted out in this life, not always to the individual but certainly to the family and to the state. He who wrongs his fellow men, but Heaven sends down misery or happiness according to their conduct. "The only approach to a future reward is the prospect of having one's name recorded in the temple of the ancestors. To retain a place in the temple of ancestors is significant witness of virtue. The highest honor they could bestow upon their teacher is the veneration with which his tomb is regarded, even to the present day. Mrs. Boyd Carpenter, in the Sunday Magazine.

According to some recent statistics on the cost of living, reprinted in the Scientific American, an Englishman spends, on an average, $48 a year for food; a Frenchman, $57; a German, $42; a Spaniard, $38; an Italian, $34, and a Russian, $23. Of bread the Englishman eats 100 pounds a year; the Frenchman, 87; the German, 64; the Italian, 35; and the Russian, 51. Of bread the Englishman consumes 389 pounds, the Frenchman, 540; the German, 330; the Spaniard, 241; the Italian, 100 and the Russian, 723.

A man's disposition is in some degree responsible for his manners, but an abrupt and generally disagreeable manner is often the result of a disordered digestion which Hawker's nerve and stomach tonic and Hawker's liver pills will permanently cure. Try them and be happy.

HOOD'S Sarsaparilla wins its way into the confidence of the people by the good it is doing. Fair trials warrant permanent CURES.

USE SKODA'S DISCOVERY the great Blood and Nerve Cure.

AY OLD AND WELL TRIED REMEDY.—Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup has been used for over fifty years by millions of mothers for their children while teething, with perfect success. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays the pain, cures the colic, and is the best remedy for Diarrhoea. It is pleasant to the taste. Sold by Druggists in every part of the world. Twenty-five cents a bottle. Its value is incalculable. Be sure and ask for Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup, and take no other kind.—m. w. f. wjlp-1 y
