

"GOLD IN A DUST HEAP."

'It's here poor Mr. Beales lived?' said Canfield.

The girl nodded. 'You should have sent for me. They say he died of—starvation.'

'Yes,' answered the girl, cheerfully. 'He were awful clemmed, that he were; but law, why even I didn't know it.'

'Where did he live?' asked Canfield again, and the girl, recognizing the clergyman, put off her suspicious expression, and said—

'If ye'll come in, I'll show you his room. He was buried yesterday, but a family is a-going to take the room to-night, and now I'm thinking it'll save me a trudge seeing you, for Mr. Beales he gave me a message to ye. Come in.'

I can neither write down all Molly Jones's dialect, nor tell you all we found out, but this is the substance of it. Molly was employed as Heaven knows how so many are employed in London, and went off at seven in the morning, and came home at about the same time at night. She lived in one room with a mother and I know not how many brothers and sisters.

Molly, with all her uncouth manners and appearance, had many good qualities, and was the only person in the house that Mr. Beales had at all confided in, and he had not confided much in her.

'Look'ee here,' said Molly, as we entered Mr. Beales's room—four walls, oh how bare! not a stick of furniture; that had all been sold long ago for rent; but in that room the tragedy detailed in my paragraph had been lived out. I felt a creeping horror; but Molly talked on cheerfully.

We looked, and she drew out of her dirty pocket a beautiful diamond ring. I was startled. The contrast of the room, the girl and this ring was too striking.

'Spec's it's reel, now,' said Molly 'Mr. Beales he gave it to me the night afore he died. 'Molly,' sez he, 'you go to the passion and give 'im this, if I can't to-morrow.'

'Lor,' sez I, 'are you a-going into the country, Mr. Beales?'

'He didn't answer for a bit like, and then he sez, 'Yes, Molly, I think I'm a-going into the country,' and then something he muttered about the land as wasn't far off. It was a most dark in this 'er room, so I didn't see his face.

'But you wants to hear the beginning of him. He war and old chap, that he war,' and Molly chuckled.

'Yes, tell us all you know,' said I. Why would my grumble of the morning back se persistently to my mind?

'Well,' said Molly, 'he come and took the room and mostly kep' himself to himself, but now and then he would speak to me as he went in and out. He looked as if he'd known better days, and he was tidy and clean like. He never got drunk nor nothing, but went out studdy to work most days. One day he said to me by accident:

'Molly, my eyesight's going, so they've turned me off.'

'Lor,' sez I, 'yer must find some other work, then.'

'Yes,' sez he, 'I will, Molly, God helping me.'

'He war of the religious sort, though he didn't stick it down your throat, as some folks do. He war out most days looking for work, and now and then he got a job, and now and then he didn't. But he never complained; he warn't one o' that sort. One day he sez to me:

'I had a wife, Molly, once, and a daughter, and she would be about your age now; but they are both in heaven.'

'Well, now, sez I, 'they'd have done better to have stayed here; we don't know what sort of a place heaven is, Mr. Beales.'

'No,' he said; 'but folks don't hunger there; and then he stops short and says, 'I think I'll just go out and get my dinner.'

'We warn't overfloush of money then, warn't me and mother, and vittles were uncommon scarce. 'Well,' thought I, 'I am glad as Mr. Beales can go out and get a dinner,' but it's my belief now, sir, as he used to say that for fear as I should offer him any of ourn.

'One day he was in a regular fix; mother was out of work, and me, too, and the children was axin for food, and I fairly took to crying, as isn't usual with me, when who should come in but Mr. Beales at dinner-time, looking quite bright like with summat under his arm.

'What's the matter?' sez he, and I told him. He stopped a minute, and then said, 'Take this, Molly; it isn't much, but it's better than nothing.'

'But what'll you do, Mr. Beales?'

'Oh,' sez he, 'I'll go out and get my dinner.'

'Lor, I was a fool, but I took it. It's hard to see one's own flesh and blood clemmed before one's eyes. That warn't long before the end, and I know he didn't get much after that; least-ways, I know it now.'

CATARRH.
Constitutional Catarrh Remedy
CURES CATARRH.

Hear what a Reverend Gentleman says of the Constitutional Remedy.

T. J. B. HARDING, Esq., Brockville, Ont.:—
DEAR SIR—It is now two years since your "Constitutional Catarrh Remedy" was introduced to me. I have waited this long to see if the cure would remain permanent before doing this, my duty, to you, as at first the happy effects seemed to me to be "too good to be true."

I was afflicted in my head for years before I suspected it to be Catarrh. In reading in your Circular I saw my case described in many particulars. The inward "drop" from the head had become very disagreeable, and a choking sensation often preventing me from lying long. I would feel like smothering and be compelled to sit up in the bed. My health and spirits were seriously affected. When your agent came to Walkertown in August, 1876, I secured three bottles. Before I had used a quarter of the contents of one bottle I found decided relief, and when I had used two bottles and a third, I quit taking it, feeling quite cured of that ailment, and have not used any since until of late I have taken some for a cold in my head.

A sense of duty to sufferers from that loathsome disease, Catarrh, prompts me to send you this Certificate, unsolicited, with leave to make what use of it you may see proper. Yours truly,

W. TINDALL, Methodist Minister.
