The cast in order of appearance was as follows: Be-gonia, Washington portrayed by Gladys Dunning, a new-comer to the stage, who very capably took the part of the Martyr's colored cook. Incidentally, the entire action of the play took place in the living-room of the Martyr's home.

Nicodemus Pipp, the colored handyman, was taken by Fred Semple who is no mean comedienne.

Lydia Martyr, spinster sister of the late Horatio Martyr, was taken by Marion Lockhart, who played the part exceedingly well.

Her niece, Gracie Martyr, was portrayed by another newcomer, namely, Ruth Thompson, who very adeptly played the part of a very naughty little girl.

Her older sister, Marilee Martyr, a young lady of eighteen, was admirably taken by Gladys Semple, while the part of her brother, Robert Martyr was interpreted to perfection by Blair Heeschen.

Doris Turner, a girl of seventeen, was taken by Jean MacLeod, who sustained her reputation for amateur acting; her brother, Sammie Turner was expertly taken by Wallace Thompson, another new-comer to the stage.

Agnes Martyr, a widow, and mother of the three Martyr children, was realistically taken by Beaulie Heckbert, who made a very charming wife for Henry Turner, a widower and father of the two Turner children, and taken by J. A. McGowan, who played a prominent part in the success of the plot.
