Youthful Bandit Has Arm In Sling

MONTREAL, Feb. 20 — (CP)—A young bandit, his left arm in a sling and a piece of adhesive tape over part of his nose, forced employees of a branch of La Banque Provinciale du Canada at gun-point recently to cash a worthless cheque for $4,500.

A gun protruded from the cloth sling. The bandit shoved the gun into the back of bank manager S. Carboneau and forced him to walk a block. The holdup man then hailed a cab and escaped.

The bandit entered the branch at Roy Street and City Hall Avenue, went directly to the manager's office and pulled out a cheque for $4,500.

"You had better endorse this so I can get it cashed," he told the manager. He then showed the gun.

Carboneau signed the cheque and then, under the gunman's orders, walked through the lobby to a wicket where cashier Pierre Jutras was working.

"Better cash this," Carboneau told the cashier.

Jutras handed over the money which the bandit stuffed in a bag tied to his belt.

The bandit ordered the six employees and four customers to the rear, then forced the manager to leave with him.

HUNGER TAMES DEER IN WORST TYROLEAN WINTER

The unprecedented snowfalls and avalanches that took 125 lives in the Austrian Alps this winter have also been tough on animals. Many were trapped by snowdrifts. Others starved because of their inability to get down through the heavy snow to reach their regular food. Predatory animals had a field day among deer, but Tyrolean mountaineers saved many from predators and starvation. A doe and her young one are shown here after their rescue. The doe had been attacked by a fox, which itself was starving. A second deer was found nearby. It had been killed by the fox.

Breadalbane and Vicinity

Mr. and Mrs. Whitfield Abbott, Glen Valley, were recent visitors to Breadalbane.

Mrs. Charles Williams, Summerside, was a week-end guest at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lorne Seaman.

Mrs. Alex C. MacDonald, Breadalbane, was a recent guest of her sister, Mrs. Ewen MacDonald, Charlottetown.

Mrs. Lawrence Newson was hostess to the Breadalbane Village Institute on Monday evening, February the 12th.

Mr. and Mrs. Vernon MacRae, New Glasgow, were recent visitors at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bismark Cousins.

Mr. Fenton Mayne, goal keeper for the local hockey team is confined to his home by illness.

Mr. and Mrs. Emerson J. Murray were visitors at the home of Mr. and Mrs. P. E. Murray during the week-end.

Friends regret to learn of the illness of Mr. James Cousins, Breadalbane. Mr. Cousins is now with members of his family in Hunter River.

Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln MacRae and daughter, Myrna Ruth, spent Thursday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Dan Dixon.

Mr. C. B. Jelly, supervisor of schools, made an official visit to the Breadalbane Village school this week.

Mr. Irving Haslam, Springfield, has returned from Brandon, Manitoba, where he attended the sheepbreeders' convention. En route Mr. Haslam visited his brothers, Dr. Louis Haslam and Mr. Raymond Haslam, MacMasterville, Quebec.

On Tuesday evening, February the 13th, a jolly valentine party, sponsored by the Women's Institute was held in the lodge rooms of the Breadalbane Hall. Crokinole was the popular game of the evening. Mrs. Elmer Wigmore was the winner of the prize for the most expert player. Other prize winners were Miss Audrey Todd and Master Bedford Kennedy. A "fish pond" added to the gaiety of the occasion, especially for the younger folk. Dainty refreshments were served by the members of the Institute.

The February meeting of the Crawford Memorial Christian Church, Breadalbane, was held at the home of Mrs. James Craig. As the president was unable to be present, Mrs. Cuyler Matheson, the vice-president, presided. The meeting opened with the repeating of the missionary creed, followed by a period of prayer. The fourteenth chapter of Luke was read in unison, and the missionary lesson based on this chapter was presented by Mrs. Kenneth Graham. Mrs. George Anderson read a letter from Mr. Frank Rempel, missionary at the Kulpahar mission, India. This letter was of special interest to the members as Mr. and Mrs. Rempel had personally visited the Breadalbane church before they went as missionaries to India. Mrs. Anderson invited the members to her home for the March meeting. The meeting closed with the Mizpah benediction. Dainty refreshments were served by the hostess.

CANADIAN NATIONAL

CRESCENT CARNIVAL

By FRANCES PARKISON KEYES (Continued)

Dawn had begun to break as they sauntered up Chartres Street. The stars were gone, and the grayness that had succeeded it. Some of the shutters were already open at the shop windows. As they passed a grilled doorway of a courtyard, the sound of singing floated out to them. Estelle stopped of her own accord and spontaneously laid her fingers on Andy's arm.

"Listen!" she said. "That must be Mademoiselle Valgalier singing! That's the Habanera from Carmen, you know. Let's stop and listen to it now."

"They drew back on the banquette to let the passers-go on. Then Andy had a better idea. He tried the grilled gate and found it unlocked. They stepped into the courtyard. The glorious song came pouring out to meet them from an upper window.

"Andy," Estelle said shyly, "I want to tell you something. But I don't dare. I'm afraid you'll think I'm very silly."

"You're never silly," he said. "You're sweet. Tell me what's on your mind that I'll think is silly."

"I love music, and I'd like to sing myself."

"Well, bless your heart! Why don't you then?"

"I do. At home. And once in a while at the Fontaine's house. I haven't much voice, really. Besides, I've never been taught how to use it, or the music to anything but a few foolish little songs."

"I know the type. But you could learn how to use your voice so that you make the most of what you have. And someone could teach you other songs."

"Yes, I suppose so. But you know how Maman and Papa would feel if they knew I wanted to do anything like that. And Grand-mere—it might be fatal to Grand-mere, at her age, if she found out. It makes her uneasy just to suspect that I'd like to sing more than I do now."

"There's just one thing about you that worries me, Estelle, and it's that there are so many things you can't do. You ought to go on the principle that there's nothing you can't do."

He held open the grilled gate for her, smiling so beguilingly that, although her heart fluttered at the sight of him standing there and locking lovingly down at her, it was again with happiness and not with alarm. He went on talking to her as if he knew this.

"Therefore I'm taking it for granted that you can meet me at Mass tomorrow morning. And that after Mass you'll take coffee with me at the French Market again, and that this time you'll eat your doughnut, too."

"I really think we'd better say day after tomorrow, Andy. Please don't ask me to try to do it every day. It is hard and I do get tired."

"Day after tomorrow, then, at the same ungodly hour."

Estelle was still asleep when Julie knocked on her door Christmas morning.

It was not until Julie rapped for the third time that Estelle answered, drowsily and reluctantly. Julie entered with an air of great importance, carrying a box over a yard long, with a roll of parchment placed significantly on top of it. When Julie had removed the lid, several dozen American Beauty roses were revealed. The scroll, temporarily laid aside, which Julie next unfurled for Estelle to see, was inscribed with an impressive salutation:

Oceanus,
King of the Pacific,
Sends Greetings to Estelle Lenoir
and issues his royal edict.
As the King decreeth, so shall it be
You are appointed Royal Consort to His Majesty the King to perform such duties as may be required of you on the night of February third.
See that you fall not in this, your royal duty.
Oceanus.

Estelle read through this scroll twice, while Julie busied herself by lighting a fire and pulling back the curtains. Then she re-rolled it and laid it down quietly on the bedside table.

"You had better put the flowers in water at once, Julie. They are very handsome, and we must not allow them to wilt. Then you may take them to Madame."

"Just as Mademoiselle says. But before I take away the flowers, I must give her the other presents that came for her this morning."

It was Estelle's turn to look surprised. New Year's and not Christmas was the day for exchanging gifts. She had never received a Christmas present in her life. Now Julie placed two packages, one large and square, the other small and narrow, but both beautifully done up, on the bed beside her.

They removed the gay ribbons and the soft wrappings together. Then Estelle herself lifted the cover of the large square box. Inside she could see at first only masses of lightly shredded paper. Fearing this cautiously, she lifted from it, one by one, the five pieces of turquoise-colored glass, ringed with gilt and beautifully painted with pink and white lilies, that made up an exquisite toilet set: Two small vases, a covered jar, somewhat larger, and two tall decanters. The flowers to go in the vases, the powder and puff for which the jar was designed, and the perfume to fill the decanters were all there, too, separately and carefully enclosed. At the bottom of the jar lay a scented envelope, sealed with a crested wafer. Estelle broke the seal slowly and read the card inside.

Joyeux Noel, Toujours a toi, Marcel. (Merry Christmas. Forever thine.)

Estelle replaced the card in the

Lion's Share To Central Provinces

OTTAWA, Feb. 20 — (CP)—About 82 per cent of the value of federal contracts during the first nine months of the current fiscal year was placed in Ontario, and Quebec, the Commons was informed yesterday.

A trade department summary tabled by Ross Thatcher (O.C.F.—Moose Jaw) showed that of $445,360,000 in contracts, $214,436,000 had been awarded in Ontario and $184,056,000 in Quebec. The period covered was from last March 31 to Dec. 31.

The department explained that the figures did not show the actual amount produced in each province, since in many cases contracts were placed with company offices outside the province where production took place.

British Columbia was third in amount of contracts placed—$33,574,000. Nova Scotia was fourth with $26,003,000.

Alberta had $6,707,000; Manitoba $5,697,000 and New Brunswick $5,468,000. Then the amounts fell to $450,000 for Saskatchewan, $402,000 for Newfoundland, $239,000 for Prince Edward Island and $254,000 for Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

In a separate reply to T. H. Goode (L.—Burnaby-Richmond), the trade department said that the total amount of government purchases by the Canadian Commercial Corporation between last Nov. 20 and Jan. 31 was $204,578,000.

Of this amount, British Columbia firms got $13,794,000. For all four western provinces the total was $19,038,000.

envelope. "I think that perhaps it would be best to put these on the mantel, Julie. We must not permit them to get broken."

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT REGARDING PRICE ADVANCE!

Practically every day there is some reference in the press to the advance in price of all raw furs. Just how high fur prices will be next fall we do not know, but we do know that during one of the leading Montreal Auction Sales held the latter part of January prices advanced as follows:—

- Ermine 100% sold—advance 75%.
- Muskkrat 92% sold—advance 60%.
- Raccoon 90% sold—advance 50%.
- Beaver 90% sold—advance 25%.
- Wild Mink 96% sold—advance 15%.
- Ranch Mink 97% sold—advance 15%.
- etc., etc.

These same pelts now being purchased are the skins to be used in next winter's fur coats! So you can readily see that there will be a tremendous advance in fur coat prices next season. Right now we are clearing the balance of our stock at greatly reduced prices, for instance our Muskrat Coats are reduced $100.00. Add this reduction to the advance in price next fall and you get some idea of the great saving you will make if you purchase now.

If you are planning on buying a new fur coat within the next twelve months we would strongly urge that you purchase now, and in that way effect a double saving.
