IDA BAILEY ALLEN Planning And Juggling Get Meal Done On Time

ENTERTAINING the in-laws at a dinner may seem an almost insurmountable task to most young wives. But if a meal is prepared comparatively quick and easy, even with only a 2-1/2 electric or gas plate, a small oven and a refrigerator. Buy all foods the day before. Write out the menu. Note the location of each of the foods. They should be started in a refrigerator. Then prepare the foods in the time sequence you will need. They should all be ready when the dish first started is cooked.

But foods cannot always be left to their own devices. Each must be supervised. You can't have a single track in mind and be a good cook. To be ready to serve you must learn to do several things at once. I have a special name for this rushing, bustling, juggling: "Time-Table meals."

MARY HAWORTH Rejecting Sick Marriage Was Realistic Decision

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: When I married in my early twenties I was emotionally young, as unprepared for marriage as a child. My husband's family were first-generation Americans of Slavonic descent, and I was a native-born Canadian. My mother and grandmother bullied and criticized me: my clothes, my hair, my personality. My husband was privately proud of my family and capabilities, but he ignored me around his family and friends, afraid to have them think he "looked up" to his wife.

My marriage was a nightmare from the start. He was cruel, insulting, seemed interested in lovenaking only when he had hurt or humiliated me. He began to strike and even threatened me.

My doctor finally sent me to a psychiatrist. Eventually I left parents and went to live in a deep depression, so severe that each hour seemed unendurable. I made two abortive attempts at suicide. None of my family came to see me.

Meanwhile I saw my husband occasionally and these encounters made me sicker. He always left me in tears, after telling me how impossible it was, how sick I was, that the sickness was my fault.

I suffered one heartbreak after another but gradually I began to get on my feet. My husband no longer could upset me as he once did.

medical student at Dalhousie University are spending the Christmas holidays with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Preston Beck, 140 Mt. Edward Road.

Miss Gail Stewart, Toronto is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Stewart, Charlottetown.

Mrs. L. M. L. MacDougall and Alan, in Ottawa.

Mrs. Ira Clark, Charlottetown, is visiting her daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Mel Broughton and family in Preston, Ontario.

Now I have a nice apartment, a well-paying job and will soon be twenty-five (degree with high marks). I spend my leisure in useful artistic pursuits and work for parish and charitable groups. But I still don't know how to love. I am sure you know my suggestions if I continue to see my husband, and also continue our sex life if our continuing to do that. But I don't want an emotional relationship carrying the risk of producing a child with no prospect of security.

Another priest told me, a year ago, that the partnership is sick. I should forgo my husband and do? Should I give him up? Or keep trying to get him to take some responsibility for his initiative? I hope you can help me.

R.B. DEAR R.B.: I disagree absolutely with the one priest's advice, to go on seeing your husband and to continue lovenaking if the meetings lead to that. I think the other priest's advice, to renounce your husband, is almost destroyed you, is realistic, prudent and right.

Your instinct is sound, in tending to reject (as offensively irresponsible) his dependence immediately. He has been a man who candidly argues for divorce, in preference to trying to make himself fit for marriage.

You are making steady progress towards maturity. I believe, even if not at a very fast pace, that you have marked a turning point towards psychological health and growth.

Do not let yourself be unconsciously to try to corner others into doing your thinking and planning for you.

Going back to the start of your sick-sick marriage that never should have been made, your implicit aim at that time was to wash your hands of the salvational possibility of growth, and let a husband take on the proposition of giving your existence meaning and purpose. The man you married proved destructive.

My husband counsels through her column, not by mail or personal interview. Write her in care of (The Guardian).

Garrison Journals Clash Over Work

Solzhenitsin rocketed to fame last year with his first work of fiction in a Stalin-era prison camp. One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich.

Liquor Outlet On 'Hill' Closed

OTTAWA (CP)—The Citizen says a liquor depot operated briefly by the West Block cafeteria in Parliament Hill for the convenience of MPs has been closed after complaints from the auditor-general's office and the New Democratic Party.

The newspaper says the cafeteria purchased stocks of liquor and sold bottles to MPs at the normal retail store price plus a service charge of 25 cents a bottle.

It said the complaints were based on the "informality" of the arrangements. The service had been started to eliminate House of Commons messengers having to go to a liquor store four blocks from the Hill to pick up orders for MPs.

There is no licensed liquor outlet on Parliament Hill.
