

Industries For Maritimes Being Sought In New York

NEW YORK (CP)—Nelson Mann, executive vice-president of the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, Monday concluded "exploratory" talks into the possibility of attracting new industries to the provinces.

The Halifax official discussed the matter with agencies of Canadian banks, and trade promotion officials of the Canadian consulate and the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, each of which maintains its own offices here, to learn first-hand what their experiences have been in this direction.

Mann said he was well satisfied with his fact-finding and information-giving trip and added that "there are many contacts that can be developed in New York City."

EXPLORATORY TRIP

He stressed, however, that his mission was exploratory and it was too early to speculate on whether U.S. firms may open new plants in the Atlantic Provinces.

The provinces have a combined population of some 2,000,000 or enough, the council believes, to provide a sizeable local market for factories that could be set up in those areas.

Although the council was formed four years ago, its efforts until now have been directed mostly at the rest of Canada. For instance, it has sought to interest importers and exporters to make greater use of the facilities of the various year-round Maritime ports.

The decision to shut down the Springhill coal mine after the recent disaster pointed up an immediate need to attract new industries, particularly in that area where many now are unemployed.

Conditions were expected to improve slightly today.

One fishing trawler was reported sunk and several other ships reported difficulties when 50-mile-an-hour winds buffeted Canada's Atlantic coast. Sea conditions south of Newfoundland were described as the worst of the season.

Newfoundland had its third successive day of sub-zero weather as freezing northwesterlies and snowflurries swept the region. Temperatures hovered around zero in the remainder of the Atlantic provinces after Sunday night lows of 20 and 30 below zero.

Subventions, Thermal Power Seen Coal Problem Solution

By DON HOYT
Canadian Press Staff Writer

HALIFAX (CP)—Premier Stanfield said Monday night that subventions and creation of a market through thermal power developments are respectively the short- and long-term cures for the ailing Nova Scotia coal industry.

Speaking in the throne speech debate, Mr. Stanfield detailed his Progressive Conservative government's efforts to meet economic problems confronting the province. Throughout, his speech was marked by optimism and denunciations of "gloomy thoughts" expressed last week by Liberal Leader Henry Hicks.

The immediate cause of the coal industry's trouble was stockpiling up 1,000,000-odd tons by Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation, which apparently exhausted the company's working capital. But four factors were to blame for the over-all trouble—railway dieselization, a Quebec hydro power surplus, possible effects of the St. Lawrence Seaway and natural gas competition.

LONG-RUN HOPE

"The hope in the longer run is for increased markets for the development of thermal power—in Ontario, here in the Maritimes and even in Quebec.

"As for the immediate future we must pin our hopes on increased subventions to enable us to move our coal into the Ontario market. There appears to be no other market open to us."

The Nova Scotia government has put a request for an estimated $4,000,000 more in assistance before the Dominion coal board. About twice that is paid now in subventions to eastern and western producers to get their coal to competitive markets.

The premier said a change had been recommended in the makeup of the coal board which now has American interest represented. It should be so constituted that its primary job should be marketing Canadian coal.

NEED MANUFACTURING

Mr. Stanfield said steps have been taken to meet seasonal unemployment in conjunction with federal and municipal governments. More year-round manufacturing operations were the long-term solution.

"Even with that, however, we are likely to have substantial winter unemployment... we must continue therefore to rely on unemployment assistance to a considerable extent."

"Looking beyond this winter... there are reasons for confidence in the growth of this province."

The basic industries were built on solid foundations. Agriculture and fishing were soundly based for growth and expansion. An improved federal credit system for farmers could be expected. Construction of the eastern Nova Scotia pulp mill, if it became a reality, would be the greatest development in the province's lumber industry in 30 years. Prospects of expansion of the Sydney steel plant were excellent. Federal subsidies for thermal power users would make the province more attractive to industry.

"I think that there is only one problem that might limit our progress," he said, "and that is the matter of transportation costs. There is, however, indication that the federal government is about to provide some interim relief."

The premier said in answer to Liberal criticism of an American consulting company seeking ways to reduce the cost of government administration that "very substantial savings" are expected.

Industrial Estates has achieved marked success, he said. It got Pictou county a new textile mill, was instrumental in saving a Weymouth boat-building industry and in helping existing companies to expand.

"The aim of the leader of the opposition and his colleagues has been to crush Industrial Estates through ridicule and misrepresentation. Industrial Estates will not fail."

Two Students Are Suspended To Climax Furor At Acadia

WOLFVILLE, N.S. (CP)—Two senior arts students at Acadia University here received suspensions Monday night climaxing a week-old furor over an article published in the student's weekly Acadia Athenaeum Jan. 30.

Donald Angus, 21, of Bridgetown, N.S., was suspended permanently as editor of the paper by the students' judicial committee, a disciplinary body nominated and elected by students.

Robert Flander, 27, of North Sydney, N.S., author of the article that the president Watson Kirkconnell branded as "foul blasphemy" was expelled from the university campus for the remainder of the academic year by the executive of the university board of governors.

In a statement the judicial committee said Angus betrayed "the trust of the student union" in using the Jan. 30 issue of the Athenaeum "to serve his own ends." The committee did not elaborate.

Besides suspending the student the committee fined him 14 demerit points, one mark short of a recommended expulsion.

REFER TO RECORD

The board of governors' statement said Flander was expelled "because of a long and unsatisfactory disciplinary record aggravated by an objectionable article written by him and published in the Jan. 30 issue of the Athenaeum."

Dr. Kirkconnell Thursday condemned Flander's article as "an infringement on religious conscience." In a letter to Flander the president told the student to leave town within 24 hours.

The article, titled Paradoxically Speaking, consisted mainly of dialogue in which two college students referred to Christ's crucifixion in tough and flippant language.

Flander said it was a "pro-Christian" allegory aiming to show a "reversal of values in modern society."

Dr. Kirkconnell said Monday night that arrangements have been made whereby Flander would be able to complete his courses by correspondence and if successful receive his degree.

$400,000 Jewel Theft Reported

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP)—A thief stole a reported $400,000 in diamonds, emeralds and other jewelry from the hotel suit of a vacationing New York auto rental magnate.

The theft Sunday was the biggest in the history of Miami Beach luxury hotels.

The jewelry was owned by Leon C. Greenbaum, chairman of the board of Hertz Car Rental Corporation, his wife, and her sister, Mrs. Arthur Cole, also of New York.

The robbery took place in the Americana Hotel. During its opening ceremonies in November, 1957, Harry Sitamore, the "king" of the jewel thieves, was arrested in possession of a pass key which would open any door in the hotel.

Sitamore's key was confiscated but FBI agents said they were considering the possibility that Sunday's thief had a copy.

More Jobs Are In Atlantic Area

OTTAWA (CP) — The percentage of the labor force without jobs and seeking work at mid-December was higher in the Atlantic provinces, and particularly in Newfoundland, than for Canada as a whole, a government return showed Tuesday.

The return, tabled in the Commons for H. J. Robichaud (L—Gloucester), showed the percentages were 7.2 for Canada as a whole, 10 for the Maritime provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island and 27 for Newfoundland.

The statistics were based on a sampling survey of the population, undertaken each month by the bureau of statistics.

Macmillan Is 65 Today

LONDON (Reuters) — Prime Minister Macmillan celebrates his 65th birthday today at the start of a momentous year for his political fortunes.

Both at home and abroad, the tall, debonair Briton faces gambles that could swell his world prestige—or sink him into comparative political oblivion.

Yet, he faces his future with imperturbability that is his trademark.

His first big test comes Feb. 21 when he flies to Moscow for personal talks with Soviet Premier Khrushchev.

Macmillan hopes his reconnaissance talks will help open the door to an era of peaceful coexistence without appeasement.

Later in the year, he faces a supreme test at home. For the first time, he will lead the Conservative party in a general election.

Macmillan inherited his government without an election from Sir Anthony Eden in January, 1957, when Eden's health broke down.
