Sicilian Shooting Victim Was Man Who Got Around

By JOHN LEBLANC
Canadian Press Staff Writer
Onorio (Nemo) Minardo was a man who really got around. He started travelling, just ahead of three murder charges, from his native Sicily in the 1930s. By the time he had come full circle to death by four bullets in his home village Monday, he had been an operator of sorts in at least three countries and a source of acute embarrassment to members of the Canadian government.

He was, by all accounts, a fairly high-ranking member of the Mafia. He did also as a baker, an occupation that led to deportation from the United States. He was suspected of being well-up in the narcotics business, but nothing was ever proved. He also wanted to be a tobacco farmer in southwestern Ontario, and it took the current Canadian government and its predecessor something over a three-year period to get him from this ambition by starting him on the last of his travels through deportation in 1964.

In between, he appears to have crossed trails with Canada's Lucien Rivard when that present fugitive from narcotics charges and Minardo were running gambling joints in Cuba when the pre-Castro island was a huge floating crap game and narcotics centre.

DESCRIBED AS KIND
He had been described as kind and gentle—customary attributes of the Mafia higher-ups—and also as crafty, ambitious and with an ability to get ahead fast. He had a knack of staying out of, or bouncing back from, big trouble until the ultimate payoff overtook him at the age of 65. After he left Sicily in a hurry in the early 1930s, he was convicted in absentia of single and double murder and armed robbery and sentenced to life imprisonment plus 30 years—convictions that were erased in 1954.

Young Minardo apparently whisked through France and Argentina and entered the U.S. illegally in 1935—another offence that eventually was to be erased, by the Statute of Limitations. Landing in Detroit penniless but with good connections he soon emerged as the owner of a bar and bowling alley, evidently under auspices of the potent Purple Gang of those days. By 1963 he was important enough to be mentioned in testimony before the U.S. Senate crime committee by Detroit Commissioner George A. Edwards, who described him as a fourth-ranking tier in the Mafia hierarchy.

DOPE IN LOAVES
Edwards also called him a murder suspect in the U.S. and said he was involved in a Detroit-Windsor operation involving assorted crimes up to and including that level. At this time, Minardo was living peacefully in the Windsor suburb of Riverview, running a bakery and according to some police suspects—slipping dope across the border in his loaves.

How he landed in the Canadian suburb, and how he got prior notice and eventually slanted toward his final stop in Sicily, developed into a long and complex story.

It started in 1961 when he took a violent hand in breaking a strike at a Detroit steel plant. Three years earlier, he had been questioned in the attempted murder of union leader Walter Reuther, but nothing stuck. This time, he was charged with conspiring to prevent workers from joining a union—a Michigan offence—and pleaded guilty. This led to his deportation in 1963.

He turned up in Cuba as a member of the high-rolling band of entrepreneurs known as Departees Inc. under the friendly aegis of dictator Fulencio Batista. Next—as it was to be revealed in the Canadian Commons last December—he appeared in Canada as a tourist in 1956 with a visa from the Canadian embassy in Havana. (There also is a record of a 30-day visit in 1955, which had no visa.)

Opening lead—king of hearts. A percentage play is one of the figures to do best in the long run, but there is certainly no guarantee that, in a particular hand, the percentage play will succeed. For an extreme example of this, we cite this deal played in the match between Great Britain and Thailand during the World Bridge Olympiad of 1964. The Thailand-North-South pair at one table bid five diamonds and made six, while the British-North-South pair at the other table bid six diamonds and made five.

The stone was searched on the bidding shown. West led the king of hearts, on which East played the deuce. Had West continued with the ace, South would have made the contract easily, but West shifted to a low club instead, the king forcing the ace. If declarer had now cashed all his trumps, he would have made the contract. West would have found it impossible to hold on to the ace of hearts and king of clubs, and at the same time maintain his spade guard. Actually, he would have been squeezed out of one of his guards on the penultimate trump play.

Instead, declarer followed the more reasonable method of trying to establish an extra trick in spades by ruffing out the suit. He played the ace of spades at trick three, followed by a spade to the king and a spade ruff. He then entered dummy with a trump, planning to ruff the fourth round of spades and thus establish the nine as a trick. He expected to return to dummy next with a trump to discard the jack of clubs on the nine of spades. But when West showed out on the first trump lead, the hand collapsed. Dummy's fifth spade could still be established, but it could not be utilized, since East would still have a trump left to ruff with. As a result, South went down seven, due to the 3-8 trump break.

Radioactivity Up In Japan

TOKYO (AP)—Japanese scientists detected radioactivity 10 to 30 times above normal levels in rain in Western Japan Thursday. However, they said, radioactivity is not harmful to man. This is the first time radioactive fallout has been recorded over a wide area since May 14, when China blasted its second atomic device. Scientists predicted radioactivity levels might raise by weekend as slow-moving, low-altitude air currents begin to sweep over Japan from western China.
