THE PIRATE.

By Sir Walter Scott.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

"You may be angry with me, my pretty young lady," said the good-humored Provost

but I cannot be offended with you. The Church of Saint Magnus has stood many a day, and I think, will outlive both you and me, much more, yonder pack of unchained dogs. And besides that your father is half an Orkneyman, and has both estate and friends among us, I would give you my word, do as much for a Zetlander in distress as I would for any one, excepting one of our own native Kirkwallers, who are doubtless to be preferred. And if you will take up your lodgings here with my wife and myself, we will endeavor to show you," continued he, "that you are as welcome in Kirkwall, as ever you could be in Lerwick or Scalloway."

Minna declined no reply to this good-humored invitation, but Brenda declined it in civil terms, pleading the necessity of taking up their abode with a wealthy widow of Kirkwall, a relation, who already expected them.

Halero made another attempt to move the Provost, but found him inexorable. "The Collector of the Customs had already threatened," he said, "to inform against him for entering into treaty, or, as he called it, packing and peeling with those strangers, even when it seemed the only means of preventing a bloody affray in the town; and, should he now forego the advantage afforded by the imprisonment of Cleveland and the escape of the factor, he might incur something worse than censure." The burden of the whole was, "that he was sorry for the Udaller, he was sorry even for the lad Cleveland, who had some sparks of honor about him; but this duty was imperious, and must be obeyed." The Provost then concluded further argument, by observing, that another affair from Zetland called for his immediate attention. A gentleman named Mertoun, residing at Jarlshof, had made complaint against Skullnot the Jagger, for having assisted a domestic thief in embezzling some valuable articles which had been deposited in his custody, and he was about to take examination on the subject, and cause them to be restored to Mr. Mertoun who was accountable for them to the right owner.

In all this information, there was nothing which seemed interesting to the sisters, excepting the word Mertoun, which went like a dagger to the heart of Minna, when she recollected the circumstances under which Morton had disappeared, and which, with an emotion less painful, though still of a melancholy nature, called a faint blush into Brenda's cheek, and a slight degree of moisture into her eye. But it was soon evident that the Magistrate spoke not of Mordant, but of his father; and the daughters of Magnus, little interested in his details, took leave of the Provost to go to their own lodging.

When they arrived at their relation's man made it her business to learn, by such inquiries as she could make without exciting suspicion, what was the situation of the unfortunate Cleveland, which she soon discovered to be exceedingly precarious. The Provost had not, indeed, committed him to close custody, as Claud Halero had anticipated, recollecting, perhaps, the favourable circumstances under which he had surrendered himself, and loath, till the moment of last necessity, altogether to break faith with him. But although left apparently at large, he was strictly watched by persons well armed, and appointed for the purpose, who had direction to detain him by force, if he attempted to pass certain narrow precincts which were allotted to him. He was quartered in a strong room within what is called the King's Castle, and at night his chamber door was locked on the outside, and a sufficient guard mounted to prevent his escape. He therefore enjoyed only the degree of liberty which the cat, in her cruel sport, is sometimes pleased to permit to the mouse which she has clutched; and yet, such was the terror of the resources, the courage, and ferocity of the pirate Captain, that the Provost was blamed by the Collector, and many other sage citizens of Kirkwall, for permitting him to be at large upon any conditions.

It may be well believed, that, under such circumstances, Cleveland had no desire to seek any place of public resort, conscious that he was the object of a mixed feeling of curiosity and terror. His favorite place of exercise, therefore, was the external aisles of the Cathedral of Saint Magnus, of which the eastern end alone is fitted up for public worship. This solemn old edifice, having escaped the ravage which attended the first convulsions of the Reformation, still retains some appearance of episcopal dignity. This place of worship is separated by a screen from the nave and western limb of the cross, and the whole is preserved in a state of cleanliness and decency, which might be well proposed as an example to the proud piles of Westminster and St. Paul's.

It was in this exterior part of the Cathedral that Cleveland was permitted to walk, the rather that his guard, by watching the single open entrance had the means, with very little inconvenience to themselves, of preventing any possible attempt at escape. The place itself was well suited to his melancholy circumstances. The lofty and vaulted roof rises upon ranges of Saxon pillars, of massive size, four of which, still larger than the rest, once supported the lofty spire, which, long since destroyed by accident, has been rebuilt upon a disproportioned and truncated plan. The light is admitted at the end through a lofty, well-proportioned and richly ornamented Gothic window, and the pavement is covered with inscriptions, in different languages, distinguishing the graves of noble Orkadians, who have at different times been deposited within the sacred precincts.

Here walked Cleveland, musing over the events of a misspent life, which, it seemed probable, might be brought to a violent and shameful close, while he was yet in the prime of youth. "With these lead" he said, looking on the pavement, "shall I soon be membered—but no holy man will speak a blessing; no friendly hand register an inscription; no proud descendant sculpture armorial bearings over the grave of the pirate Cleveland. My whitening bones will swing in the gibbet-irons, on some wild beach or lonely cape, that will be esteemed fatal and accursed for my sake. The old mariner, as he passes the Sounds, will shake his head and tell of my name and actions, as a warning to his younger comrades.—But, Minna! Minna!—what will be the thoughts when the news reaches thee?—Would to God the tidings were drowned in the deepest whirlpool betwixt Kirkwall and Burgh-Westeras, ere they came to her ear! and ho! would to Heaven that we had never met, since we never can meet again!"

The Children's Carnival at Victoria, Craupud, on Wednesday last, was a decided success, and was witnessed by a large number of spectators, who were highly pleased with the many gay little costumes fitting over the glistening sheet of ice. Among those worthy of special mention were "Vanity," "The Flower Girl," "Mr. Mulcahey, Esquire," and the "Highland Boy."

At nine o'clock the adults in costume were allowed on the ice, and among them we noticed many new costumes, notably "P. E. Island," "Fancy Work," and "Mr. and Mrs. Bowser," which were very good. The clown also did his part exceedingly well. Good music was furnished by the Westmorland Band, who are improving very rapidly.

Considering this was the second Carnival of the season, the managers are to be congratulated on the success and perfect harmony of their efforts in having secured and perfected such an enjoyable institution as the Victoria Skating Rink. Below will be found a list of those taking part—
