

Some cough mixtures smother the cough. But the next breeze fans it into life again.

Better put the cough out. That is, better go deeper and smother the fires of inflammation. Troches cannot do this. Neither can plain cod-liver oil.

But Scott's Emulsion can. The glycerine soothes and makes comfortable; the hypophosphites give power and stability to the nerves; and the oil feeds and strengthens the weakened tissues.

For The Children

THE CHARIOT OF THE SUN.

A Bed-time Story From Greek Mythology.

In these uncomfortable dog days we are reminded of a saying of those old Greeks, in whom Daphne and I are so much interested; "One who cannot guide the fiery horses sits in the chariot of the sun."

Now as you no doubt already suspect, there is a story about this. It concerns Phaeton, a Greek lad, whose father was the great and glorious sun god, Phoebus Apollo. Phaeton, proud of his parentage, became boastful and insolent to his companions. One among them expressed his doubt of Phaeton, claim to such honor whereupon the young boaster grew very angry and determined to seek his father to demand some proof by which to convince his unbelieving friends.

He easily gained the consent of his mother, Clymene and journeyed east to the palace of the sun, which he found without difficulty, for its glories shone from afar. As he neared the palace he became dazzled with its brightness and when he entered it he was awed by the splendour of the figure upon the throne.

In attendance upon the radiant sun-god were the Day, the Month, the Seasons, the Year and all the Hours. Spring was garlanded with flowers; Summer was clothed in airy garments and held in her hands sheaves of golden wheat; Autumn grasped a vessel brimming over with the juice of grapes and his head was crowned with grapes and leaves; while Winter's locks were stiff and glistening with hoar frost.

Apollo knew his son and bade him approach the throne, laying aside his dazzling crown of rays so that Phaeton might look upon him, for you know how blinding the sun's rays are. Daphne. Apollo asked the youth his errand and listened patiently to his story promising to grant him any favor that he might ask. Rash promise! Phaeton begged for nothing else than to be permitted to drive, for one day, the chariot of the sun. Apollo in alarm pleaded with the boy to ask something less dangerous. In vain he begged to be released from his vow; Phaeton could not be moved from his purpose. Full of sorrow Apollo granted his wish and cautioned him to hold a tight rein, to use the whip sparingly and, above all, to drive in the middle course between the earth and sky, in the tracks made by the sun chariot.

Fearlessly Phaeton mounted the gilded car and swiftly the fire-breathing steeds rushed through the gate of the Dawn. In the boy's inexperienced hands the horses soon became unmanageable; they left the traveled path, darted through trackless places, leaving a trail of fire and smoke everywhere.

The goddess of earth and the god of the sea sent up their prayers to Jupiter imploring his aid. In answer Jupiter smote the reckless driver with a shaft of lightning and hurled him, flaming from his seat. Phaeton fell like a shooting star into a wide river. His sisters, it is said, sat all day long on the banks of the river, mourning for him. The gods, in pity, transformed them into poplar trees, and their tears became amber as they flowed into the river. Alas, poor Phaeton!—Selected.

QUEEN STREET

In children what we call mischief is merely misdirected activity. They are constantly on the alert to find out all they can about the new world surrounding them. If in the process they touch and injure some of our cherished possessions or do themselves harm we immediately exclaim then they are in mischief. If we furnish safe occupations for the busy fingers that they will be the less likely to meddle with what we wish them to leave alone.

A habit of attention should be carefully cultivated in children. The power of concentration is invaluable to them in after life, and if they are early taught to give their minds to the matter in hand, whatever it may be, they learn to attend to the business of the moment with undivided interest. Half the mistakes that occur come from wandering thoughts: the directions given are not fully grasped, or the action is done mechanically and fails of its proper effect because the mind is elsewhere.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Baby.

Oh fie, little baby to cry!
Just shut up your eyes and by-by
Oh, no, little baby,
Not so, little baby!

Why should the pet scold us then, why?

Oh, no, little baby, not so!
To sleep you must very soon go!
And why, little baby,
You cry, little baby,
Your auntie would just like to know!

Listowel Gentleman who has no Complaint to Make Regarding Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Listowel, Ont., July 10.—Mr. Thomas Tamblin of the firm of Tamblin and Clime, grocers, was lately a recipient of a communication from a gentleman in Toronto who is gathering statistics as to cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Some three years ago Mr. Tamblin was troubled with a weak back and severe pain in the kidneys. He used Dodd's Kidney Pills and his trouble was removed. The Toronto enquirer asked if the cure had been satisfactory. Mr. Tamblin took the letter and wrote on the bottom in a firm hand, "The cure was quite satisfactory."
