

THE DAILY EXAMINER.

NOVEMBER 4, 1889.

Chief Justice Palmer.

The long career of Chief Justice Palmer was brought to an end at about ten o'clock yesterday forenoon. To many persons it has been wonderful that the end was not sooner.

The deceased Chief Justice was a son of James B. Palmer, a barrister of the Supreme Court of Dublin, Ireland, who emigrated to this Province and became one of the first of our lawyers.

His career as a barrister was very successful. It is stated that "he was engaged on either one side or the other in nearly every cause of importance argued in the Supreme Court and Court of Chancery between 1845 and 1873."

He entered our political arena in the year 1835, when only twenty-six years of age, and soon became a prominent figure in the exciting contests of his time.

He exercised a decided influence over the public affairs of the Province during this long period. Entering the Government in 1842, he was Solicitor-General from October, 1848, to August, 1851.

He was twice a delegate from the colony to the Imperial Government in England. In 1847, he went to London with the Hon. Joseph Pope and Andrew Duncan, to procure the removal of Lieutenant-Governor Huntley.

Like most men of strong character, he entertained strong convictions—strong prejudices. In the course of his long public career he roused determined opposition, and, in some cases, bitter enmity.

He was, indeed, at heart one of the most kindly of men. Ready to assist the needy, to encourage the depressed, to sympathize with the sorrowing, he drew many warm and constant friends to his side.

The rumor that the Prince of Wales is the victim of a chronic disease that gives him but a year's lease of life is probably a newspaper canard.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

And its Attendant Evils

VERY FORCIBLY DISCUSSED

In St. Dunstan's Cathedral.

THE PLEDGE ADMINISTERED.

REV. R. P. STRUBBE, one of the Redemptorist Fathers holding the Mission in this city, delivered a special sermon on the liquor traffic and its attendant evils, to the married and single men of the congregation in St. Dunstan's Cathedral last night.

The rev. gentleman, in opening, expressed his pleasure at seeing so many people present. Their presence in such numbers, he thought, indicated a desire on their part for a change of life with regard to the liquor traffic and the evils that followed in its wake.

Catholics, he said, have no need of such an Act. The church had the sacraments, prayer and other strong means in her hands for crushing out the liquor traffic.

Intemperance, he went on to say, is the ruin of both body and soul, of everything that we should hold dear. Drunkenness is a mortal sin (1) when one willfully becomes drunk, (2) when one is not entirely drunk, but is temporarily deprived of his reasoning faculties.

Whosoever does not adopt the proper course to prevent drunkenness and the cultivation of the liquor habit is living in a state of mortal sin. The man who incites another to get drunk is also guilty of mortal sin.

The man who drinks to excess—who spends the money for liquor that he should give to his wife and family to provide for their wants—commits mortal sin against charity and justice by depriving them of that which they need at home.

The drunkard, he proceeded, transgresses all the ten commandments. Do you suppose, he asked, that he whose god is his belly, will observe the second commandment? See him reel along the street. Hear him blaspheme and curse.

He bore his illness with the utmost patience, although at times a great sufferer, and passed peacefully to his rest. He leaves a widow and a numerous family of children and grandchildren to mourn for him.

The furniture in the Skating Rink will be on exhibition to-night. Ladies, look at the assortment of Plush Sealtee for mantles at J. B. Macdonald's.

and the devil is bound to respect this image. But there is one sin which destroys in man this likeness—this image of the trinity—and that sin is drunkenness.

The drunken man is a beast. Is there any happiness where drunkenness abounds? Is there happiness in the house where the father or son is a drunkard? Certainly not.

How many men are there to-day who would be rich if it were not for their fondness for liquor? He knew there were many. On Saturday night the drunkard comes home to supper with his pay in his pocket.

Now, as to those who sell liquor. There are those who will not sell on Sundays nor who will not sell to a person they know will get drunk.

After some further remarks as to the reprehensible conduct of the children of drunkards and drunkard-makers, the rev. gentleman closed, and nearly every person took one of the three forms of pledge submitted.

Hon. George S. W. Bagnall. THE Hon. George S. W. Bagnall, who passed away in New Zealand a few weeks ago, was born in this city, spent his early life at Hazel Grove, was married to Martha Stephenson, and settled in New Glasgow.

Mr. Bagnall had attained the good age of 71 years, having been born in Prince Edward Island on the 4th June, 1810. He was descended from a portion of the Staffordshire family of Bagnall, which settled in the United States before the Revolution, but who declined on that account to take up arms against the home country.
