Self-Expression Is Noted By Youth In Czech Capital

By MARGARET NESS BRAGUE (CP) — The youth kick is here, too. On central St. Wenceslas Square, which is actually a boulevard, one can see the Czech version of the Beatle haircut and the tight pants on boys and quite high-riding skirts on the girls. But it isn't a pronounced fad. Most of the young people dress well but conservatively. The Institute of Interior and Fashion Design, the government organ to aid the home-furnishing and fashion industries, does acknowledge the influence that youth is wielding in most countries. "I and my travelling companion, Mrs. Jo Aldwinckle of the Oshawa (Ont.) Times, conferred with several members of the institute's staff. They agreed that young people want to have their own styles. The institute has been doing serious research not only on fashions for the young, but on the psychology behind the need for self-expressive clothing. While London and New York already have many young designers creating way-out clothes for their own age group, the institute indicated it doesn't approve of this youth revolt. Two of the directors did agree that the way-out look was infiltrating their fashions. However, in a showing especially arranged for us of some of the current ready-to-wear styles, we didn't find any of the really zany clothes now prevalent even with the top Paris houses. AIMED AT YOUTH The styles weren't stuffy and they were extremely good. Tunics, swinging skirts, even a Western influence in some casuals, along with saucy caps with almost an Oliver Twist look—all these were definitely designed for the young market. But the mod fashions on the main streets did make Prague look like a city in Western Europe. It was different in Warsaw, Poland. There we could have counted on our fingers the number of really off-beat boys we saw during our week there. And you noticed a really short skirt. But in both countries we found the young people most friendly. The Institute of Interior and Fashion Design kindly sent a young member of the staff to meet us at Prague airport and take us to our hotel. Helena Slamour was pretty, smartly dressed and spoke excellent English. TAKEN ON TOUR One afternoon in Prague's delightful old city hall square we shared a sidewalk cafe table with a young bearded sculptor and his wife, also a sculptor. They spoke a little English. The husband insisted on paying for our coffee and they took us off in their little car to see some of their favorite places and then back for more black coffee to their small studio apartment in the old picturesque section of the city.

By sharing a cafe table we also made friends with a young Polish couple in the lovely ancient city of Krakow where Helena Rubinstein was born. Both worked from 8 a. m. to 3:30 p. m. and they suggested we meet them again the next afternoon for coffee and some sight-seeing.

The husband brought his Polish-English dictionary with him. When we tried to insist on paying for the coffee this time, he looked up the word host and pointed to his wife and himself. Then he found the word guests and indicated Jo and myself.

Suicides Heavy In Red China

HONG KONG (AP) — More than 2,000 persons in Canton and Shanghai have committed suicide since the militant Red Guards swept Chinese Communist cities last month, says the Hong Kong newspaper Fai Po. Fai Po says the report came from Chinese crossing the border into Hong Kong with stories of Red Guards harassing and persecuting persons accused of Western ways and habits. Meanwhile, arrivals from China said the Red Guards on Kwangsi province border near North Viet Nam met heavy resistance from a group of workers who called themselves the Purple Guards. The arrivals said the two groups clashed when members of the Red Guards tried to destroy historical landmarks.
