Every Wife Who is Dissatisfied With Her Husband and Home Needs to do a Bit of Self-Analysis. Maybe the Fault is Her Own

Listen, wives! Do you ever think that you may be largely responsible for the faults in your husbands to which you most object? There is his taking you for granted, for instance, which is perhaps the No. 1 grievance of married women.

Well, stop your breast-beating long enough to get a line on your own conduct. Perhaps you are accessory to the crime of your marriage going flat. If your husband is no longer a lover, take you out nagging and fretting like he does, have you kept yourself up for him and kept yourself looking attractive? Or have you felt that any old rag was good enough to slouch around home in?

Another one of your grievances is that your husband doesn't talk at home. That he buries himself behind his paper of an evening and is just about as entertaining a companion as a graven image would be. Maybe he is afraid to talk. Maybe he has found out that the only safe thing is silence and that he can't broach any subject without starting a fight.

Dear Dorothy Dix—I am a young man of 22 and I have recently broken my engagement to a girl of 18 whom I never loved, but whom my mother wanted me to marry. I am in love with a married woman a year older than myself who has a little girl, and we hope to marry as soon as she gets her divorce, but my mother objects and says she will disown me if I marry this woman.

Snappy Fashions For Home Use

Great Grandmother wore a sun-bonnet and here is the new version of this old picturesque style. Now we wear them in the modern way, as a frame for a young face and with the back open. This one is merely a well shaped brim held on by a buttoned or tied band and therefore very easy to make.
