Modern cameras are truly gifted

Perhaps the most exciting thing about photography as an inspiration for Christmas giving this year, is broadscale cameras and movie cameras alike—that make it possible for the uninitiated to make good pictures from the start.

And most happily, improvements aimed at completely curing the timidity of "little old butterfingers," are engineered into budget priced models as well as the fine precision equipment. Yet this year's cameras are truly "gifted."

With all due respect to the growing photographic sophistication of confirmed hobbyists, they too are interested along with hordes of beginners, in the new equipment.

Just as in the case of the beginner, the built in improvements eliminate for all so many complexities and inconveniences of the past that all the photographer need do to get good results is to concentrate on pointing the camera.

Major Improvements
Two major advances account for all this. One is the improved engineering of exposure control which means that, in many instances, you can't even click the shutter if the light isn't right.

The other is the introduction of loading systems that eliminate the need for "threading" the film into the position. Just open the camera, drop the film cartridge into position—and you're all set to shoot. The camera does everything but select the subject matter.

Some new models variously identified by terms such as "instant" loading and "Instamatic" also are powered to automatically advance the film after each shot, thus making the camera ready to take the next picture without further ado.

The Instamatic line has introduced another built-in feature which greatly simplifies use of flash for still camera. Instead of using the one-shot bulb system these new models are designed to accept a "flash cube." The new models are engineered to rotate the cube, to position a fresh flashbulb for the next shot—AND this, too, is done automatically. Each cube has four flash bulbs.

Bigger 8 mm Film
Newest among the movie cameras are engineered to use the recently introduced Super 8 mm film in, of course, "drop in" containers.

Thus, with this new film furnishing larger image area, and the new models endowed with sharper lenses and automatic exposure control throughout the sequence, better, sharper, more vivid pictures result, even for the dub.

Another development here is the creation of an almost weightless light with a long cord that can be plugged in anywhere, to provide instant illumination for indoor color or black and white movies.

The light is designed to ride sort of "piggy-back" on an Instamatic movie camera without in any way interfering with handling otherwise.

Camera Does It All
Again it's a case of the equipment doing everything but deciding what is to be photographed.

A budget priced camera is available also among the Polaroids which produce finished prints in seconds. It's for black and white. Other models also make finished color prints. Best bet is to seek the advice of the experts in the camera stores.

Mahogany dog house

For the dog who has everything, how about a solid mahogany indoor dog house, with a gold-plated crest of arms on the entrance?

This is just one of a number of "unusual" gifts for those dogs, on the list. Others include, for the golfer, a gold-plated putter with battery-operated siren, flashlight and compass.

On second thought, maybe it's just as well that most people don't have everything!

WHAT'S NEW?

"What else is new?" is a good question for Santa to ask himself when checking for gifts ideas. Stores and departments serving the home will provide plenty of giftworthy answers.
