IS MARS TELEPHONING?

IF NOT, WHAT MEAN THESE STRANGE, MYSTERIOUS NOISES? Mr. Freese, of the British Post Office, On "Electric Signalling Without Wires" His Recent Demonstrations—Edison, Likewise, Keeping Tab on the Noises.

Can we open up electric communication with the inhabitants of Mars? That is a question recently considered at a meeting of the Society of Arts in London, where Mr. W. W. Freese, engineer to the Telegraph Department of the British Post Office, read a paper on "Electric Signalling Without Wires."

Under the supervision of a Royal Commission appointed to inquire into electric communication between the shore and light-houses he had conducted a series of experiments which amply demonstrated this fact. There was no difficulty in speaking from the shore and Flat Holm, three miles distant from the place of experiment. Mr. Freese then went on to say that "strange, mysterious sounds" are heard on all long telephone lines when the earth is used as a return, especially in the cold months of the year.

After further describing the mysterious sounds which had attracted his attention in the still watches of the night, Mr. Freese said: "If any of these planets be populated with beings like ourselves, having the gift of language and the knowledge to adapt the great forces of nature to their needs, then if they could oscillate immense masses of electrical energy to and fro in telegraphic order, it would be possible for us to hold converse by telephone with the people of Mars."

These mysterious sounds which so puzzle Mr. Freese seem to correspond with those noticed by Thomas A. Edison, who has turned Ogden Mountain, in New Jersey, into a great magnetic and electric wire about it. At the time of the last opposition of Mars he noticed an increase of the seismic mutterings, which have recently been ascribed to his planet.

Mr. Freese is only one of the scientists who are now experimenting along these lines in a scientific way. He is watching the progress of the earth. Neither Mr. Edison nor Mr. Freese has been so bold as to say that the strange sounds are of extraterrestrial origin, but they have not otherwise explained them.

On the other hand, there are many scientists firm in the belief that the next few years will witness the opening up of communication between the people of the two planets. In a little more than a year, it is believed, the earth will be telegraphically strengthened by the strange light seen at the Lick Observatory when Mars was under observation during its opposition to a little over a year ago. The lights were arranged in a triangle. Nightly as the great orb rose from the ocean bed to the vault of heaven the lights flashed on the earth in a series of lines, and in the immense lens of the Lick telescope they glowed with steady and continued effulgence. Was this an effort of the inhabitants of Mars to attract the attention of those on earth?

Such had been the opinion of Flammarion, who had argued in favor of Earth signalling back with a triangle of lights thirty miles across. It was shown that the conditions of Mars were more nearly those of Earth than of any other planet. Both of the snow caps could be plainly seen, and may be seen now in any first class telescope, for Mars is now to be observed in the morning about thirty degrees west and fourteen degrees south of Venus in the constellation Capricorn. The well defined atmosphere of Mars is also plainly visible, and astronomers can tell by the increase or decrease of its sun spots and its position in regard to the sun the progress of its seasons and whether or not the Mars is having a cold winter. The theory of Schiaparelli has likewise many believers, who assert that the strange straight lines of water are canals built by its highly civilized inhabitants.

Mr. Freese says he has kept a record of the strange, mysterious sounds which have attracted his attention, while Edison has studied to decipher, if they are messages from Mars. The precise discovery on the other hand, puts it in the power of the people of Earth to send direct electrical currents to Mars, whose inhabitants are so much in want of ourselves that they are anxious to hear from us. Both of the scientific world when the message is sent out that communication has been established!

There are those who firmly assert that this is an experience of the immediate future, that electricity is the universal force and the one whereby the planets will come into contact with each other, if they ever do. The mystery of electricity is the strange fluctuations it undergoes. If it were an earth property solely it would have no effect on the planets, common to all the universe and not interfered with. But its strange goings and comings, its apparent relations to Mars, and yet its known sympathy with other heavenly bodies, seem to show that somebody somewhere is fooling with the dynamo and cutting off and starting on the current.

Romantic Ghost Story. As pretty a ghost story as has been told for many a day has been spoiled in Riddelford, but unlike most legends of the kind, has left behind it a romantic interest. The story was of a white-robed figure which had been seen several times lately flitting about among the graves in the Catholic cemetery, always disappearing by apparition as it approached the gates of the church, and yet its known sympathy with other heavenly bodies, seem to show that somebody somewhere is fooling with the dynamo and cutting off and starting on the current.

Dying on His Feet. "That man is just dying on his feet." How often persons brought to death's door by overwork and consequent nervous prostration and debility. They cannot afford time to rest (so they tell you) and gradually they reach the stage where their friends speak of them in the words above quoted. For all who have reached such a stage or are in broken health from any cause, there is a sure specific in Hawker's nerve and stomach tonic, the great nerve and brain invigorator, blood and flesh builder, and a perfect stomach tonic and aid to digestion.

The pen is mightier than the sword. At last a Montreal millionaire named Zagas thinks so. He hit a man with a sword, and then had to resort to his pen to remedy the wrong. He did it by signing his name to a cheque for $500 which was handed over to a hospital.

Colonel Ingersoll was riding uptown on a New York elevated when a gentleman sitting opposite recognized him and whispered to his friend: "There's Bob Ingersoll." The whisper was loud enough to be overheard by a saintly-looking old lady in the adjoining seat. She rose immediately, cast a frightened look at the Colonel, and made a break for the next car.

SINGING IN CHURCH.

(St. John St.) More than once the objection of the right to sing in church has come before the courts. It will be fresh in the memory of our readers that a clergyman in Prince Edward Island, well known and respected here, had to suffer for two years the vagaries of a too independent singer, until the nuisance had to be suppressed by law. The last case happened at Chester. Frances Williams was summoned for wilfully disturbing the services in Chester Cathedral. The proctor, Rev. Harold Wright, said the defendant sat under the Bishop's throne, and persisted in singing in parts of the service where the congregation were not intended to join. She sang out of tune, and nearly upset the choir. On several occasions her conduct had become so outrageous that the proctor had become a sore trial to the congregation. She had been expostulated with by himself and by prominent laymen, but without effect. When the summons was issued to appear, she refused to do so. The defendant said she had not sung to annoy anyone else. She only joined in the singing that should be joined in by the congregation. Witnesses said that she had become a sore trial to the congregation. Dr. J. C. Bridge, organist, at the cathedral, in corroborating, said the defendant had a most powerful voice, but of a not particularly good quality. The boy chorists could hardly keep their faces while she was singing, and he had sometimes a difficulty in accompanying the choir in consequence of her constant interruptions. When the summons was applied for on the previous day, the proctor said that the defendant persisted in sitting under the Bishop's throne, and His Lordship declared unless the nuisance was abated he should close his robes and sit among the congregation. The mayor said the bench did not want to spoil the defendant's devotion if she were in earnest, but the services at the cathedral must not be disturbed.

The Defendant—I only follow the choir. I don't lead them. Dr. Bridge—That is what we complain of. Defendant was bound over in £10 to repeat the offence, and was mulcted in costs.

KEEP YOUR MOUTH SHUT.

(From the Boston Herald.) Great numbers of people go through life with their mouths open day and night. They take into the delicate organs of the mouth and lungs, all the germs of disease, and breathe into the lungs without protection intended by nature the noxious elements in the atmosphere, and lay the seeds of pulmonary disease and many other beginnings of imperfect health. A prominent physician in Boston, acting as a throat specialist, remarked that he would have nothing to do if people could only keep their mouths shut. If you notice persons on the street who keep their mouths habitually open, and that they breathe through their mouth instead of their nostrils, never having been taught that this is the special function and use of the nose. In many cases the nostrils have become so impaired by disease that they are practically filled up so that it is impossible to breathe through them, and then it is only after a great deal of effort that they are able to resume their natural function. The importance of breathing through the nose is very great indeed, in the case of public speakers and readers, who, if they take in the air through their mouth, are usually afflicted with dryness of the throat, which speedily develops into some form of bronchial disease. This is the origin of the clergyman's sore throat. People living in the country, and never thinking of the use of the nostrils, easily form the habit of ignoring their use. It is said that people who sleep with their mouths open are usually snorers.

NAMES OF CHILDREN.

Down to the early part of the present century it was usual to name a child after the saint on whose day he happened to be born. A writer to Notes and Queries in 1823 states that he had recently baptized a child by the name of Benjamin Simon Jude. On his expressing some surprise at this somewhat singular conjunction of names, he was informed that the birth had taken place on the festival of St. Simon and Jude, and that it was always considered very unlucky to take the day from a child.

The custom of naming children after any particular saint has fallen into general disuse, except in those countries where the population is composed almost entirely of Roman Catholics. The giving of a name in baptism is kept as an essential part of the rite, but is merely a custom derived apparently from the Jews, and which through long practice has become an important element in the ceremony.

Many instances might be furnished of children who have inadvertently received wrong names. The registers in Westminster church contain the following entries: "1770, January 17, Charles, daughter of John and Betty Haines. This child ought to have been christened Charlotte, but, owing to a mistake of the sponsors, it was wrong named." "1791, July 31, William, daughter of William and Sarah Weidick. N. B.—It was intended that this child, being a girl, should have been christened Maria, but through a mistake of the godfather it was named William."—The Westminster Review.
