Good China's Worth It For It's Very Durable

By ELEANOR ROSS

WHILE we were admiring table settings in the china department of our favorite store, we overheard a customer asking to see some bone earthenware.

The clerk, a gentleman of the old school, then proceeded to give the young woman a fine dissertation on the various types of "china". He explained briefly but succinctly, every type from porcelain right down to the fine plastic items that appear on our tables today.

WIDE RANGE

This made us realize what a wealth of table settings there are and how beautiful so many of the comparatively inexpensive settings are. Remember, in choosing china, it's beauty, not price that counts, but still it's good to know that some of the prettiest sets and pieces are not at all expensive.

We wish that clerk had explained, though, what "open stock" really means. Many shoppers have been disappointed in the purpose of what they thought was a lifetime china pattern, only to discover, when a breakage occurred, that the items could not be replaced.

The explanation is simple. The length of a pattern's life is entirely dependent upon its popularity. One cannot expect a manufacturer to keep the molds and patterns for a set which sold only in small quantity.

Fashions in china change as do other fashions, although some stores guarantee open stock for five years.

So, when selecting china, it is a good idea to find out how long the pattern has been on the market, how much in demand it is and what are its chances for the future.

CHINA'S TOUGH

Fine porcelain china is expensive; it is in the luxury category. But despite its fragile appearance, it's remarkably tough.

The proper ingredients, carefully selected and mixed, make fine china. Certain basic ingredients or materials are considered "tough". Bone is one such, which is why "bone china" rates high.

HIGH TEMPERATURE

Fine, durable china must be fired at high temperatures which makes the china wonderfully resistant to heat much more so than the tough-looking earthenware.

The durability of the glaze depends upon the glaze itself and the body of the material over which it is placed.

The high-temperature-fired glaze of better china resists scratching to a greater degree than does the soft glaze of earthenware.

Treat your china with care and it will last and look lovely for many years. Never subject the pieces to abrupt water temperature changes.

HORRORS —

THE REFRIGERATOR

Do not use a good piece of china to store something in the refrigerator. Yes, we have seen this done only too often.

Plates and other flat pieces should be carefully stacked, placing paper toweling or special mats between each dish. Hang cups by the handles.

With reasonable care, even with plenty of use, good china lasts.

The bride was attended by her sister Gladys, who wore an ankle length dress of blue nylon with cape and puffed sleeves and matching headdress. Her bouquet was of American Beauty roses.

Mrs. MacKinnon chose for her daughter's wedding a dress of figured taffeta, with matching accessories.

Following the ceremony, a buffet supper for 125 guests was held at the home of the bride.

After the reception the happy couple left on a honeymoon trip through the Maritimes.

ELLEN'S DIARY

August Has Arrived, With Shades Of Red And Gold

Pleasantly cool and refreshing the night is, after the heat of this midsummer day. A little wind, in a sweet breath, comes in at the open door. We listen for a sound — that of the frogs by the stream. But in vain. That music is gone. Vanished, as is too, the white drift of the apple bloom back in the June-time — By this, we shall have moved into August's days. Month of deep colors, August is, with its flowerings: the reds and golds, the orange and purple, which lead up to the autumn's bright shades. The poppy or the gladiola, we recall, are August's own flowers, the pretty sardonyx, its jewel.

We listen. And what do we hear? Only the sleepy sound of the stream's fall through the spillways in the dam in the deep of the valley. Tonight it is remindful of the rustle of old-time crisp taffeta skirts, moving on a Sabbath evening along a Church-aisle. A quiet whisper of sound. All in all, charming.

"It's a hot sun" Jamie, eldest grandson of the name, commented coming in from his haying this afternoon for a cooling drink — These days, a jugful, frosted by the chill of the refrigerator, has no last at all to the thirsty workers, who come sweat-stained, and without complaint, to enjoy the cooling glasses.

"And a hot wind" Gaze added. Now, there was no sight of the cattle on pasture. The horses flicked tails lazily in the shade of trees. We saw Scampie pad down the stone steps to seek relief from the heat in the cool of the cellar —

One of the family, who chanced to be driving on the highway this afternoon, happened upon an extremely curious sight. So odd indeed it was, "I could hardly believe my eyes!" Ahead of the machine of this farm, and for some distance, a great transport rolled. It's passengers, what Islander could guess? Elephants, they were! Huge animals belonging to a circus, who while travelling in the heat of the day, were keeping themselves comfortable by spraying their bodies with water. They lifted it from a pail and applied it "in the cutest way" with their trunks — what strange and interesting scenes, one may, these days, unexpectedly catch! It is unlikely that ever again shall this youngster of the farm, drive in the train of an elephants' transport.

A sweet breath of night enters now, laden with the aroma of the hay-time. And over the mill, above the dim of its wooded background on the slope, and up from the house on the hill, the Lady Moon drifts in her amber-ed boat, on an all-silver sea. In the houses about, the windows darken.

James puts down the newspaper he had not had time to read during his busy day. Removes and folds up his glasses, and lays them aside.

"Well, Ellen" he smiles, "we've had another good day at the haying. I wonder what tomorrow has in store?"

MARY HAWORTH

Shy Girl's Panic Grows As Wedding Day Nears

Dear Mary Haworth: I am a girl in my late twenties, engaged to be married shortly to a wonderful boy who loves me more than life. I love him very much too and we get along very well.

The problem is that I am very shy, quiet and self-conscious, with an acute inferiority complex. And I am getting progressively worse instead of better.

I am even nervous when I have to visit my fiance's family. Fortunately he understands my problem fairly well, although I'm certain he doesn't realize it is an emotional illness, as I think it is.

A few weeks ago we went to his cousin's wedding where I met some of his relatives for the first time. I practically shook with nerves while being introduced and my face froze. I realize I wasn't the center of attraction but at the same time I am certain I was being sized-up.

Perhaps the single life is best for me, even though it would be very lonely. If I don't marry Bob, I have no desire to marry anyone. I couldn't bear for him to be disappointed in me, as he adores me so much.

Red Cross Swimming classes sponsored by the Kensington Lion's Club and held at Margate Shore.

Miss Lyda Hunter and Miss Betty MacFadyen, have returned to their homes at Kensington, from Tatamagouche, N.S., after a very pleasant week spent at the Atlantic Christian Training Center.

Mrs. Gladys Frizzell, RN, returns this week to Sydney, N.S., where she is operating room Supervisor in Sydney Hospital, after vacationing at Bedeque where she was guest of Mr. and Mrs. William Montgomery.

Recent arrivals on the Island are Mr. E.M. MacLennan, Caledonia, Ontario and his business associate, Mr. G.E. Dystant, Highland Park, Michigan.

Mr. MacLennan, a former resident of Charlottetown, is managing director of Great Hardware, Caledonia, chairman of the Hydro Commission, and a prominent figure in local political circles.

Mr. and Mrs. George Milton, Malden Mass., are visiting relatives and friends at Kensington and vicinity.

Miss Rita Somers of Hamilton Ontario, accompanied by her sister Kathy and Miss Denise McAlpine holidayed in Souris and Augustine Guests of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Murphy.

Mr. and Mrs. Francis Ahern, Rockton, Mass., accompanied by the former's mother, Mrs. Phil Ahern of Albion, Maine are guests at the home of Jerome McCarren, St. Mary's Road.

Mr. and Mrs. Julian Rooney and family returned to Montreal yesterday after vacationing with Mr. Rooney's mother, Mrs. Marie Rooney, Orwell Cove. They also visited Mrs. Rooney's mother, Mrs. James Murphy, and sister, Mrs. Alfred Phelan, Morell.

I am very jealous of him. If he so much as glances at another woman I feel he prefers her to me, which is ridiculous, as he is always praising me and telling me of his love and devotion. So far as looks are concerned, I have no cause to feel inferior. I am beautiful with a perfect figure, yet I do feel inferior even to plainer girls.

I also fear that I may not be able to go through with a church wedding as planned. Recently I developed an excruciating headache that lasted almost three weeks despite different medications. The doctor said it was due to nerves. Please, please help me.

Dear P.L.: "Understanding is half of cure." a proverb says. And I am going to suggest at least a few clues that may lead to profitable self-understanding for you.

First I think it is true to say that people inherit the particular temperament, or call it nervous constitution, that will see them through life. You've inherited a very finely strung constitution, which predisposes you to prefer a very sheltered life. And there is nothing essentially inferior or abnormal about that.

There are millions of supersensitive souls like you in every generation. Some of them have the privilege (whether it is their good fortune, I'm not sure) of leading the sheltered life that spares them the struggle of having to adjust to a rough-tough world.

Circumstances compel others to come out of their shell and suffer the anguish of trying to be like "other people" — meaning those of coarser, denser fiber, whose feelings simply don't vibrate on your wave-length and never will.

If one is just naturally a supersensitive type, as I think you are, it is well to recognize the fact. Accept yourself, self-respectingly for what you are. If you are shy, timid, fearful, self-conscious as compared to different types, well, so you are. So what of it?

Don't keep yourself on your mind, seeing yourself in a most unflattering light, as in a distorting mirror, and then imagining that this is how others see you too.

Rather, learn to focus on other people in company. And think about the surface scene unhurriedly. Deliberate the question of what you choose to do in the situation. If you choose to be quiet, to be smiling, as a matter of comfort, or if you simply don't relax, well, be true to yourself. Do as you wish, or do as you must, always without embarrassment or a sense of apology.

This is known as having personal style; it is the essence of composure and poise.
