HAVE A GUESS.

Oh, wheelmen, all take my advice,
And don't forget, be sure
To take a look at the famous "Bike"
In PROWSE'S well-known Store.

The handsome Brantford Bicycle
That in their window's shown
Is as good as any in Charlottetown,
And it may be your own.

A jar in which are cents galore
Is placed where all can see;
Guess how many cents the jar contains
And the "Bike" your own will be.

Be wise, make all your purchases
At PROWSE'S Clothing Store;
Each purchase, on that Bicycle,
Will give you one chance more.

Their Carpets, Hats and Furnishings,
And all, in fact, they keep,
Compared with others in the town
Are more than quite as cheap.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

PLEA FOR POLITICAL MORALITY.

SIR,—Now that our legislators have returned to their homes we can breathe more freely, and think. Much has been said about the various taxes imposed by the present Government. They have gained for themselves a remarkable reputation as hungry leeches, but taxation was inevitable. This has not surprised us. With such examples as Mercier, Fielding, et alia, it was only to be expected that our leader should endeavor to go one better. Money must be found for past malfeasance and the miser's proverb comes in, get it honestly if you can, if not, get it. But while we allow ourselves to be robbed of money, for the sake of all that is holy and true, let us take care of our reputation. Should we lose this, nothing will indemnify its loss. The Province is a family, the Government members occupying the position of heads of the family. A departmental official who plays fast and loose with his word, is more to be feared than the most deadly malaria. He can only be compared in his influence to leprosy. It appears in a very innocent form, but spreads with frightful rapidity until the whole carcase is a mass of corruption. Parents should lay this matter seriously to heart. If our public men lie so outrageously to their constituencies, the baneful result will soon be observed in our young people. Honest men, whatever their political proclivities may be, must condemn the Premier for not redeeming the promise given at the Lyceum. The appeal to the country should have been made. However, the seeds of disintegration are beginning to sprout up in the Government. But in the meanwhile let the electors remember that the present Government holds office only just as long as the people have confidence in them. Pressure should be brought to bear upon the members that they do their best to conserve the true interests of the country, more especially on the side of morality.

COUNTRYMAN.

NOTES OF A WAYFARER.

CHANCE and luck combined (I think) brought me to a halt at Kelly's Cross, Lot 29, on the afternoon of Thursday, May 10th. Before being long there I heard a concert discussed, and on finding out it was coming off that evening, I resolved at once to remain in the village over night and "take it in," especially as I had heard abroad previously of the high order of the concerts at this place, and, I may say, on account of the hospitality of the people. About 8 o'clock, for a small entrance fee, I found myself in the hall, and took some pains to procure myself a good prospective point in the back part of the hall. The latter was comfortably filled from stage to door by an orderly, good-looking and appreciative audience, and when any new character entered the stage, by a little enquiry I found out the name and general information concerning the same. It seems a mutual improvement Society is in existence during each winter, and under its auspices the entertainment was given to raise funds to enlarge the library owned by the Society, and the Vice President of the Society (Mr. John Smith I learned) presided. The same gentleman gave a humorous reading in the course of the programme, which appeared to be his forte, and being faithfully read, was heartily received. Solos rendered by two young ladies, Miss Monaghan and Miss McQuaid, were gems, so pathetically and harmoniously were the words sung. I have attended many concerts in town and country, but can say with no undue flattery that these two young ladies are not a whit behind some who are dubbed professionals. The leading spirit in the entertainment, whom I afterwards found out to be the secretary of the society, Mr. J. F. Monaghan, deserves credit for the part he took. I would judge (and I think, being totally disinterested, have a fair field for so doing) that to him, I will not say absolutely, but largely, was the success of the entertainment due. Two choruses of school children were under his guidance, and they did credit to themselves and their leader. They are phenomena in the musical art, ages considered. Of course the best part, the part most appreciated in town or country, was the funny one. The gentlemen who personated the "funny fellows" did justice to their parts, their acting being very natural—no affectation, but real, genuine, the originals themselves you would say. The secretary and another Mr. Monaghan and a Mr. Flood (I think) performed the comic parts to perfection, the last named gentleman's impersonation of Brod. Gardener being capital. Every time Brod. Gardener's swarthy fist came down on de table he brought down de house in laughter and applause. The reverend gentlemaa, the pastor of the place (I understood) who took part in brightening and enlivening the enjoyment of the evening, will, I hope, pardon me for making any mention of him. He appears to be an adept on the violin, and his vocal powers are deep, voluminous, strong, melodious. It is pleasing to see a people's pastor take an interest in all their aspirations, and even to add his mite to increase their social pleasures. This holds good with Rev. P. A. McElmeel, the pastor of Kelly's Cross, Lot 29.

The programme came to a close about 10.15 p. m., with the national anthem, and I left with the strong resolution of being present (if I could hear of it) at the next entertainment at Kelly's Cross.

Since last I visited this place it boasts of a tailor and a blacksmith. There is ample scope for one of St. Crispin's knights here also. If the people had him, and the telephone, which, I understand, they are negotiating for, Kelly's Cross would be well supplied with accommodations. Hoping they may have these necessary conveniences on my next visit, and thanking them for favors received, I remain,

DICTIONARY MAKING.

THE PRIMARY OBJECT OF A LEXICOGRAPHER IN HIS WORK.

The Esteem in Which Great Literary Men Hold a Good Dictionary—Something About the Methods in Vogue While the Making Proceeds.

Dr. Holmes is reported to have said that if he could only have three books he would choose the Bible, Shakespeare and the Dictionary. He added that few people fully appreciated the interest as well as usefulness of a dictionary. Theophile Gautier said: "Do you read the dictionary? It is the most fruitful and interesting of books. Words have an individual and a relative value. They should be chosen before they are placed in position. This word is a mere pebble: that a fine pearl or an amethyst."

The primary object of a lexicographer is not so much to establish new rules or new standards of authority as to ascertain what the world, through its greatest specialist, has agreed to accept as on the whole the best derivation or the best form of pronouncing, spelling or defining a word. Webster and Worcester both erred in this regard, perhaps because in their time it was more difficult to obtain a consensus of opinion, and perhaps, also, because there was too much of "a one man power" in control of their dictionaries. The difference between lexicographers is not unlike the difference between statesmen. One watches the trend of popular opinion and leads by going with it. Another regards more what he wishes to be than what can be at the time, and waits for the people to catch up with him. Perhaps they decline to follow, and he is then considered a doctrinaire—a dreamer. The practical lexicographer belongs to the former class, if, in time, the existing standards change, then it is for his successors to record such changes.

For example, take the word aluminium or aluminum. It is a recent scientific term. The spelling has varied, some preferring the first form, others the second. In such a case, in favor of which shall the lexicographer decide? If he gives both as equally authoritative, nothing is settled. If he decides in favor of one, from his own standpoint, the public may ultimately decide on the other. What he properly does, therefore, is to write to several hundred scientific specialists, asking them to state their preference. The one which receives a sufficient majority to indicate decidedly how opinion is verging, is either given the preference or is stated as the authoritative form. This is the true principle to follow in dictionary making, with only rare exceptions.

Besides gathering information regarding words directly from many individuals, the work of all reputable authors must be searched in order to learn the various meanings in common usage. With the growing demands of civilization, the coinage of new words does not keep up with the demand, and hence there is a constant tendency to make new applications of old words, often metaphorically. A sailor, a poet, an artist or a lawyer may all use the same word, but each with a meaning adapted to his own special calling. All these words and meanings must be searched out by the lexicographer, and must all be entered alphabetically into handy reference books with the utmost accuracy.

This enormous vocabulary having been finished, each word is copied on separate numbered blank cards, which are bunched in groups of twenty-five. Four of these packages are given to a definer. Here begins the really original work of the new dictionary. The definition is the basis of such a work; it is the frame to which all the other parts of it are subsidiary. The work of the definer is of great difficulty. Not only must he give a clear and concise statement of the meaning of a word, gathering a correct sense of that meaning from the row of dictionaries before him, but he must be extremely careful that his definition does not infringe on the definitions of other dictionaries. When a definition has already been given of a word which is complete, one can perceive that it is not easy to frame another equally satisfactory definition. Nor is it easy to define some simple words except by terms so much more difficult as to make the definition more obtruse than the word defined. It has been the usage of lexicographers to define some words by merely giving their synonyms. But that system is abandoned in our latest dictionaries. From thirty-five to forty definers are employed on a modern dictionary, many of them specialists on various classes of words, such as scientific terms. Compound words are in charge of a scholar who has made a study of the subject. There must also be specialists for cross-references.

When the "definer's" work is done, then the definitions go up to the "reviewer" or sub-editor, who adds to them as occasion may require, but more often finds it necessary to draw his pen ruthlessly across word after word, diffuseness in definition being one of the greatest difficulties to overcome. Then follow the quotations, gathered from the whole range of literature and science, giving the authorities for the variants in the meanings of a word. This is a most perplexing task; for the editor of this department not only has to select from many score of quotations offered him, but he must have so wide and thorough a literary knowledge as to be able to make the weightiest selections. The package of definitions and quotations are then sent to the paster's room, where the selected quotations are attached to the respective words. And now we come to the type-writer's room. What trouble and cost might have been saved to the lexicographers of old if but the type-writer had been known to them! The amount of work involved simply in this copying process before a single page has been "set up," is indicated by the fact that eighteen copyists were engaged for three years in type-writing half of one of the new dictionaries. The type-written copy must then go through the hands of several editors for final revision.

Speeches and Investments.

"So," said the old gentleman, "you think of becoming a politician?"

"Yes, father; I have ambitions in that direction."

"Well, you will of course be more or less of an orator, and I want to impress on your mind one admonition. Be brief. Remember that a speech is not like an investment. You cannot increase the interest by waiting."

"Gentlemen:—I feel that I cannot say enough in favor of Hood's Sarsaparilla. For five years I have been troubled with scrofula in my neck and throat. Several kinds of medicines which I tried did not do me any good, and when I commenced to take Hood's Sarsaparilla there were large bunches on my neck so sore that I could not bear the slightest touch. Palpitation OF THE Heart, Nervous Exhaustion AND Stomach Trouble.

Rockland, Mass.

My daughter, Mrs. Mars, has been suffering from the above diseases for years, and employed all the

Leading Physicians

in Rockland and specialists in Boston, but got no relief. They said it was caused by a bad state of the blood. She could not sleep nights; bowels constipated, and palpitation of the heart so bad she could hardly walk. She has taken 4 bottles of and SKODA'S LITTLE TABLETS. Now she can work every day, eat well and sleep soundly. I can never express my gratitude. MRS. S. E. CROWELL, Rockland, Mass.

Skoda's Discovery,
