

Jennifer Callaghan - Junior, History.
I think the students should have had more of a say in it. It is a good decision though.

David Brown-Sr. Engineering
I think the decision was wrong because I can't see the University affording another school right now. The pros and cons should have been examined more closely.

Alyre Martin - Junior, political science.
I don't feel that it was a very wise move. It will have fairly disastrous effects for the university. There will be a reallocation of resources and some of the other departments will suffer. It is not in the interest of a liberal arts university.

Danny Lane - 1-1/2 business, 1 1/2 biology.
I think we'll have more recognition as long as we keep taking other courses to broaden our views on the work world.

CAMPUS COMMENT

WHAT DO YOU THINK OF SENATE'S DECISION TO GIVE THE DEPARTMENT OF BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION SEPARATE SCHOOL STATUS?

Susan Doyle - Sophomore, psychology.

I think business made fun of Artsies and when they found out that they were Artsies, they had to change.

Neil MacNair - Senior, Biology.

I think business should still be in the Faculty of Arts, but I don't think it will affect science at all. They're all Artsies anyway.

Dianne Hughes - Junior Business.
I think it's a great decision.

Doris MacKinnon - freshman, Arts.

I'm not aware of what the decision is.

John Carson - Senior, Business.

What's UPEI without business? I like the decision.

Don Foster - Sophomore, political science

I think it's irresponsible of Senate to pass something which has not been studied to any great extent and for one group to pull political weight as business has. Business enrollment is peaking and will decline so what is the good of establishing a business school now when five years down the road there will be less students.
