

THE ACCUSING PICTURE.

(CONCLUDED.)

On it was portrayed a night scene amid some ancient ruins. A humane form lay prostrate on the ground, a stream of blood flowing from a gaping wound. The upturned face, that of a man past middle age, whose silvery hairs glistened in the moonlight, was convulsed with the death agony.

With what fearful fidelity the artist had traced in the contracted features the last expiring throes? Another figure stood partly stooping over that of the victim. It was that of a man in the vigor of youth, well-knit, muscular, symmetrical. In one hand he grasped a dagger, from whose blade dropped great drops of blood. The countenance, perfect in outline, but in expression relentless and cruel, was partially in the shadow, yet painfully distinct in every lineament.

Arthur was startled by a wild shriek. "My poor, murdered father!" was wailed out in tones which thrilled through every fibre of his being.

Turning quickly his eyes fell on the pale, terror-stricken face of Violet Malvern. Her gaze was fixed, as if beyond the power of withdrawal, on the prostrate, bleeding form.

"And behold the murderer!" exclaimed Arthur Wolcott, glancing rapidly from the face of the assassin to that of Lucien Durand.

As the likeness flashed upon her, Violet staggered back from her companion, and, but for Arthur's timely aid, would have sunk helpless to the floor.

"Stop that man!" cried Arthur, as Durand turned to flee.

"Who accuses him?" demanded an official, at the same time staying the fugitive.

"I do," said Arthur.

"On what proof?"

"Whoever painted the picture can furnish it." Durand was taken into custody. The artist was found. His story was brief, but to the point. He was a poor Italian painter, who strolling out one night near Rome. Witnessed, from a concealed spot, the commission of a robbery and murder. He recognized in the assassin a famous bandit chief, and, fearing for his own life, if he betrayed his presence or divulged his knowledge, he had carefully kept the secret till, finding himself in another country, he had ventured to make the terrible scene, so vividly impressed upon his memory, the subject of a picture. In Lucien Durand he fully identified the murderer.

The criminal was surrendered to answer to the government whose laws he violated, and, in due time, received his just reward.

Violet, in truth, had never loved, Lucien Durand, and the rumor of their betrothal was merely gossip. His society had been accepted by reason of the service with which he was accredited, and people had drawn their own conclusions.

All this Arthur Wolcott soon found out, and matters were speedily cleared up between him and Violet.

A woman at Eureka Springs, Ala., lately attempted to elope, but was detected by her husband. He offered thereupon to pay the expenses of her intended journey. Out of sheer womanlike contrariness she refused to go.

Nearly two thousand millions of pounds of sugar will be imported into the United States during the present year, paying an average ad valorem duty of nearly 60 per cent.—a higher duty than is paid on most articles of luxury, such as silks, laces and champagnes.

Mary Pyatt rejected John K Arnold's offers of marriage for a long time, at Kimberley, Pa., but he was persistent, and at last she consented. There was a great wedding, and the couple went off on a tour. After a week the bride returned to her home, declaring that she had no recollection of anything between her last refusal of Arnold and her waking to find, to her great surprise and displeasure, that she was his wife. She insists that she was out of her mind during the interval, and declines to even see her husband.

A cave in Eastern Tennessee is two miles in length, and has openings at both ends. The owner of the ground around each entrance charged for admission, and acted as guide for visitors. Their rivalry led to serious fights in the cave, for each held the other to be a trespasser. Then one of the contestants hit upon a novel and effective means of running the other's business. He sunk a shaft so as to admit a large stream into the cave at about the centre, and, as their was an inclination in a favorable direction, the water poured out at the enemy's portal, while his own was unobstructed. The matter is to be made the subject of a law suit.

The Limerick Chronicle states that notices have been posted up at the gate piers of several Roman Catholic chapels in the counties of Clare and Limerick, calling upon the parish priests and their curates to join the League and establish local branches in their parishes, or if they do not their dues will be stopped from them at Christmas and Easter. The Rev. Mr. Hennessey, P. P., Castle Connel, has condemned in the strongest language the conduct of the persons who had posted up threatening notices in the village and its vicinity, threatening death to any farmer who paid rent to Lady de Burgh higher than Griffith's valuation. This reverend gentleman has expressed his determination to assist in bringing the writers of these letters to justice, if possible. He has, however, received a document purporting to come from the parties whose conduct is condemned, warning him that if he persists in the line of action which he has set out for himself, he will find his Christmas dues considerably reduced.
