The Birthday Murder

gentleman in a black opera cape who sucks blood from the throat of a young woman with a low-cut nightgown. She spurred Albert on to have his writers do a scenario along the lines she had outlined, prophesying that it would be the making of him. Albert summoned up the courage to follow her suggestion, and her prophesy came true. A month before "The Cold Boy" was previewed in Glendale, and the next day both Variety and The Hollywood Reporter were loud in their praise. "Tense, skillfully wrought melodrama rising out of the strange chaos of a twisted mind," said the latter. "The Cold Boy" is by far the best mystery film of the year. Hime, although limited by the small budget, has managed to create out of what might have been a run-of-the-mill story, something so unusual in its effects that it is actually Class in quality. Although delving into the realm of abnormal psychology, the story is so gripping that we can confidently predict a box-office success.

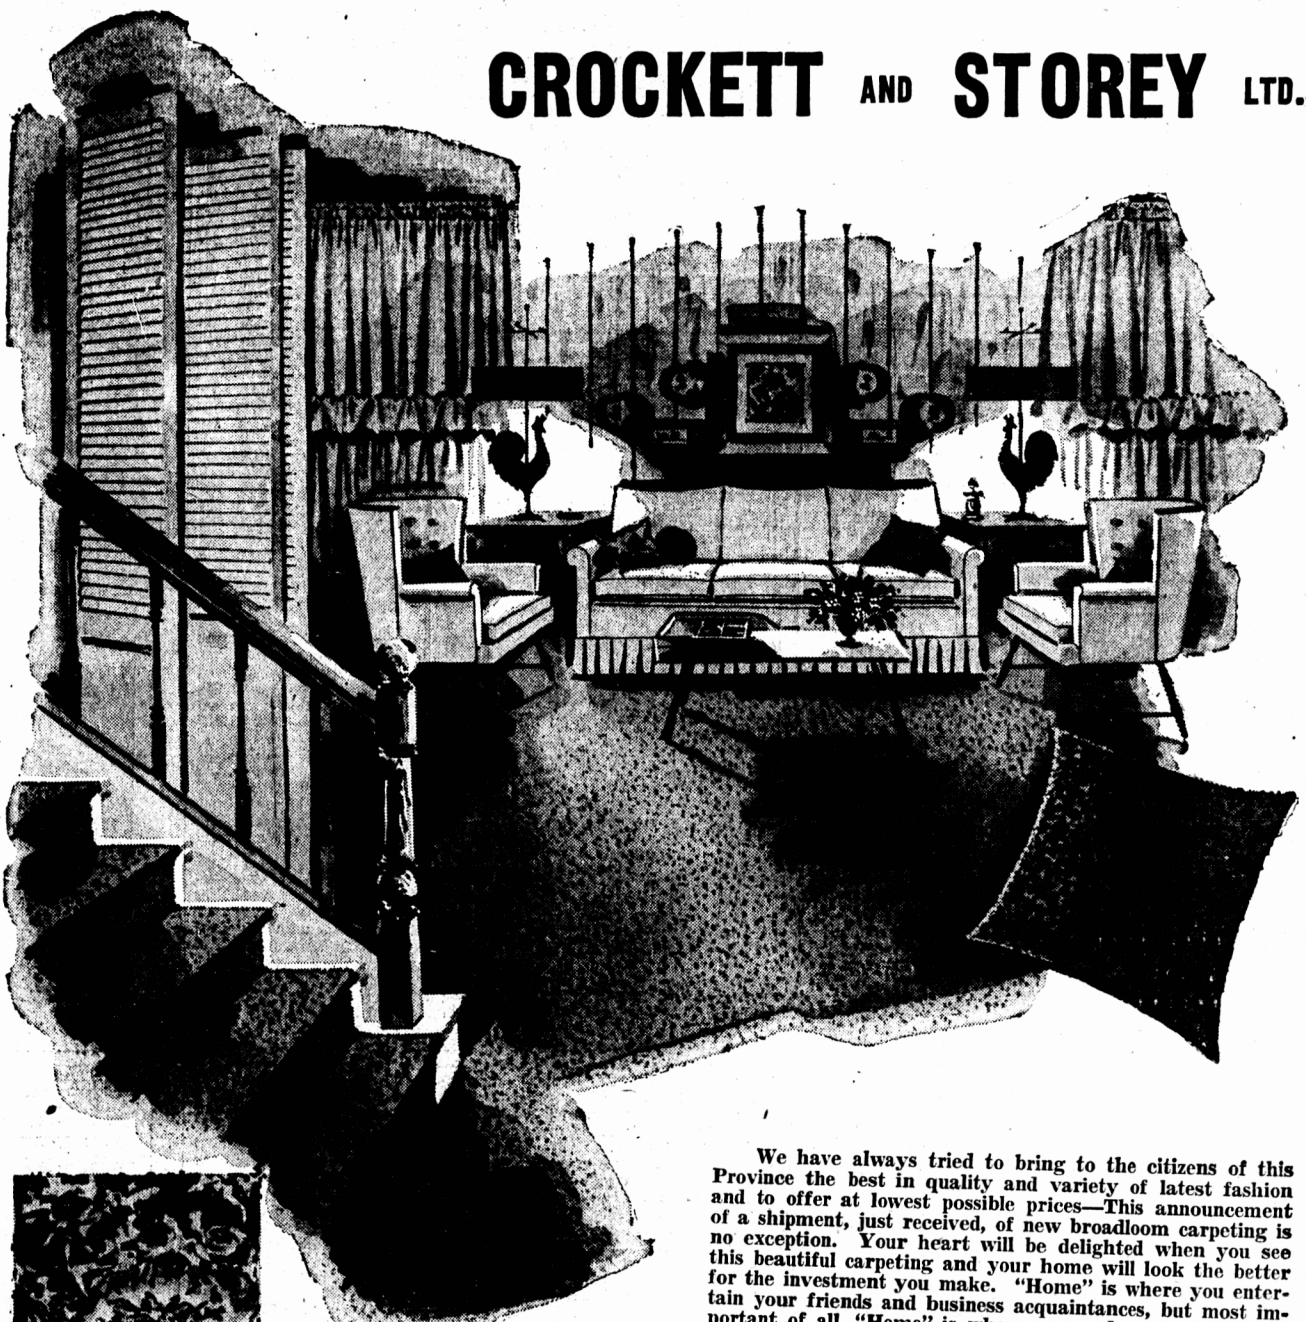

And five months after their marriage came this splendid news that the studio was considering him as producer of "Ina Hart." Albert relegated Victoria's quirks and stubbornness to the realm of unimportance. He took to whistling while he shaved.

Albert was, for Victoria, the perfect husband. The intimate part of their marriage was by unspoken mutual agreement played second to the work to which they had both for so long given first place. Albert was considerate, charming and no bother at all. Victoria found her life with him far more to her liking than the marriage she remembered, for all the burning ardors of young love.

Only one thing troubled her. Whenever she found herself infrequently in Albert's room, it would seem to her that Albert had no permanent place in her life. That one day the suits would be gone from the closet, the clothes-brush from the highboy, and Albert would be gone too.

ances. Usually, such friendships can be cemented through a church or similar organization to which you both belong, or through other friends.

DEAR MISS DIX: My boy friend has begun to lose interest in me. Is there anything I can do to regain it?

ANSWER: When a boy loses interest, the best thing to do is pack the romance in stardust and begin all over again. If you feel his affection is ebbing, don't hang on like a lost hope; be one step ahead of him. Perhaps his heart is just wandering temporarily and will come back to you. Don't borrow trouble, but if you really see a parting in the offing, be prepared!
