The bidding: West North East South 1♣ 1♠ 3♠ 4♥ Pass Pass 5♣ 5♥

Open lead—king of clubs. This hand comes from a tea of four match and points up the difference in views that can be taken by declarers faced with the same set of circumstances.

The bidding was identical at the two tables and the opening lead the same. Both declarers ruffed and were faced with a wide choice of plays. One possibility was to lead a diamond and finesse, intending later to trump a diamond in dummy whether the finesse won or lost. A heart finesse, was to be reserved pending developments, after which the spades could be played in the hope only one trick would be lost in that suit.

Another possibility was to enter dummy immediately with a spade and take a trump finesse, hoping that a favorable spade break would then take care of the diamond losers. At Table 1, the latter plan was adopted. South led the ten of spades. West properly ducked, and dummy's ace was played. A heart finesse proved successful and the ace of hearts then dropped the king.

But when the spade queen was led, West took the king and shifted to a diamond. The finesse lost and a diamond was returned. Declarer would lose two spades and two diamonds to go down two.

At Table 2, the declarer took an entirely different view. He decided to give up on the heart finesse because he didn't mind losing to the king if East had it, since the diamonds could not be attacked successfully from the East seat. There was also a chance the ace of hearts might catch the lone king.

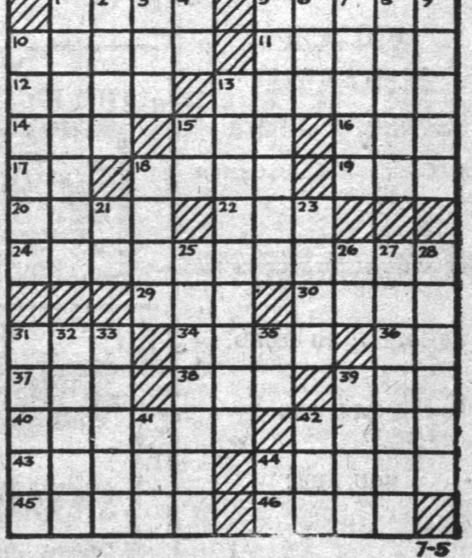

So declarer played the ace of hearts and continued with the jack which East won. East could do no better than return a club which South ruffed.

Playing on the basis that West, who had opened the bidding, must have a spade honor, declarer then led the queen of spades. West covered with the king, and later made his jack of spades, but declarer made eleven tricks.

This line of play didn't save the trump trick, but it did save

U.S. Satellite Firing Is Flop

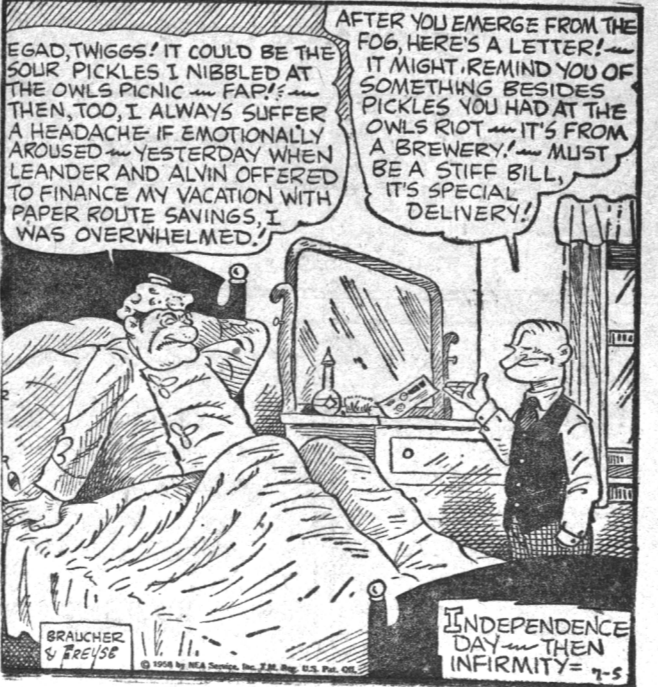

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) U.S. Navy scientists worked Thursday to piece together shattered bits of evidence on the fifth Vanguard satellite launching failure in six attempts.

All they had, however, was reams of teletype tape relayed back during the latest Vanguard's short-lived flight into space.

The rocket and its 21½-pound, gold-plated satellite were somewhere in the Atlantic Ocean. Vanguard fizzed early Thursday when the second-stage vehicle failed in flight after an apparently smooth liftoff.

Shortly after the Vanguard failure General Electric Company announced development of a new rocket engine which could launch a satellite weighing as much as 10 tons.
