YOUR HOME COULD BE NEXT!

Yes, most fires can be stopped before they start . . . if we take common sense precautions. Watch your electric wiring. Don't overload your lines. Take care of those newspapers you're storing in the basement. Keep matches guarded . . . away from children. Remember, most fires are preventable.

The first social of the year started off with a bang last Thursday. The socials are held at the Holy Name Hall and are this year under the direction of entertainer, Charles Roche. If observations from the first social mean anything, it is quite safe to say that the "Saints" have been accepted by the girls in town and, to add an afterthought, the acceptance seems very mutual.

During the past summer, Mr. Gerald Steele represented St. Dunstan's at the W. U. S. C. Summer Seminar in India. On Sept. 26th he presented in an orderly and concise manner the highlights of his trip to the assembled students, faculty, and guests in the Assembly Hall.

Among the highlights of his stay in the East was a tour which took him through most of India, and which enabled him to get a very accurate picture of the life, culture, and problems of the people. Mr. Steele pointed out that the problems most rampant among these people are: health, scarcity of food, low wages, and illiteracy. The speaker did not suggest any panacea for their ills, but he did point out solutions which would, at least, partially solve their problems. Other interesting features mentioned included: the diversity of languages and religions found within the country, the causes and results of the partition of India and Pakistan, the variety of people whom he met — both influentials and peasants. His talk was supplemented by several films which depicted particularly industry and culture. The native songs, dances, and art proved to be most interesting and much different from the Western style. Some of the larger industrial works, however, seemed to reflect the Western touch.

From the accurate picture presented to us who heard Mr. Steele, we can feel assured that his watchful eye missed little and that the voyage to the Orient will help to broaden not only his outlook on the Eastern way of life but also ours. At the present time Mr. Steele is engaged in giving lectures outside the campus in different parts of the Island.

This morning our football team left for Mt. Allison to participate in their first Intercollegiate game of the season. Were football played at S.D.U. merely for the winning of games, then the team that left here this morning would leave us in a very pessimistic mood. Probably no football team at S. D. U. has been plagued so often with injuries as our present one. The injuries though not of a serious nature have sufficed to keep several of our key players benched for today's game. However, we at St. Dunstan's have always and will retain our optimism when our boys play, because we know they will play their best and in so doing show good sportsmanship, which we consider is as important as winning games.

Until next week, from S.D.U. to all of you, health and happiness.

POWER INTERRUPTION

There will be an interruption of electric power on our Borden and Malpeque lines on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 4th, between the hours of 1:00 and 5:00 p.m., weather permitting, for the purpose of allowing the necessary replacement and moving of poles and line to make way for the construction of the Trans-Canada Highway.

The interruption will affect Palmer's Lane and part of Mt. Edward Road in Parkdale, together with the general areas North and West of Charlottetown.

MAKE SURE YOU'RE INSURED

This is the season that most bad fires take place! Overheated furnaces, dry air, faulty flues, all are causes. Now is the time to make certain your fire insurance is adequate to cover you on any loss.

Table Top

by Eden Phillpotts

CHAPTER XV

Continued

For two days the storm persisted, and dark skies and heavy seas were the portion of the Iguana; then the weather abated and the air grew clear. Many dead fish came to the surface, and among them were great creatures that had perished in the downfall of Table Top. Coal was running short, and Costa felt doubtful whether the Marquesas could be counted upon to supply it, but Maine believed there must be ample stores awaiting.

"They are French islands, and if still a bit elementary, they wouldn't be short of coal," he declared.

It was Angus who first raised the question of the treasure with his friends. His antiquarian spirit hungered and thirsted to see and handle jewels that the Inca had fashioned and worn.

"I never want to see them or think of them again," said Jane. "They mean dead men, and though we can't feel very unhappy about Benny Boss after all these years, we are all dreadfully miserable over poor Felice and his fate. So we ought to be. I almost hope the box has nothing but rubbish in it, for then we shall know he had the joy of anticipation."

Then Aylmer spoke.

"We'd better think twice and again before we smash open the sacred casket and see what's inside," he said. "I was wondering about it last night and facing certain elementary facts. The first fact is that the chest doesn't belong to us at all. It was Felice Pardo's and he paid for the thing with his life. But it belongs now to his heirs and assigns, just as much as everything else in his cabin belongs to them. We may safely assume that he didn't make a will before he started, and so it follows everything left behind him must belong to his mother. I don't feel very gay when I think of Sigora Anita Pardo in any case. She's rather a difficult sort of woman as Angus knows, and we've got a complicated story to tell her with a very mournful ending. The treasure is about the only thing likely to cheer her—if you ask me, because all the rest of it is going to sound utterly mad. She's not a very friendly person, anyway. She can talk good English, but I have never felt that she likes the English—always suspicious and broody."

"She told me once frankly that Pardo wasn't getting nearly enough money for his services," said Maine.

"You see, then," continued Aylmer, "if we pour the treasure into her lap, as likely as not, she will think we are holding up the cream of it and doing something devious; but if we hand over the little chest unopened, then she must realize that it's all above board. There's such a lot to tell the poor woman, and much of it is so difficult to explain."

"I see that," said Angus. "Before Felice joined us for the treasure hunt he told her no doubt that one quarter of the booty was to be his. Now she's got to hear that it's all his, and she'll want to know what happened to alter the original arrangement."

"As long as she finds it's all hers, she won't bother much about that, surely," asked Jane. "We needn't give ourselves away to her, or anybody. You can't tell her that you and I funked the spiders, and you surrendered your interest rather than go among them again, and that I told Tom I wouldn't marry him if he did. Anyway, you both went quickly enough when it was a matter of trying to save her son. Coast can swear to that."

"It all shows how complicated the situation is," said Tom. "We've got to be jolly careful what we tell her. She'll hate us in any case."

"We might do this," suggested Maine. "One can't say, of course, how long it's going to be before we get back to the mainland, but if old Jacob Fernandez is still alive when we do, then you could put all the facts before him, Tom, and get him to see Anita Pardo. She'd listen to him if not to us.

"Nobody will be more interested than your Signor Fernandez," promised Jane. "He ought to be thrilled. Perhaps he'll even believe us. I've got a feeling that so few people will. But he might, because he was really responsible for the whole adventure—he and the parrot between them."

"From the Marquesas it's a bee line due east to Callao," said Tom, "but how long it's going to take Costa to get there, I don't suppose he knows himself as yet."

"It must be round about three thousand sea miles," explained Angus. "Not much more than a fortnight if we get fair weather."
