Ghost Ship of North Shore Is Reported Again

(By The Canadian Press)

BATHURST, N. B., May 8 The ghost ship of the North Shore, tradition of Gulf of St. Lawrence coastal waters of nearly 70 years has been reported again. Latest to claim a glimpse of the flame-shrouded craft as it plows its way across seas soon to be storm-crested, is a Bathurst district youth.

Wild and fantastic have been some of the stories of this mystery ship that is said to haunt the northern shores of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, always before a storm. Fishermen, farmers, shore residents and even train crews, speeding along lines close to the sea in dead of night or early morning, have reported the phantom ship. Always, they say, its rigging and spars are ablaze, weird tongues of flame lick at its three masts, and a red glow overhangs the scene. Its appearance has been described in books relating tales of the north shore country.

On his way home from a neighbouring house where he had been visiting late—it was about one o'clock in the morning—the youth saw a glow ahead of him on the Bay Chaleur shore, he related.

"When I first saw it, I thought it was some house afire. I started to run down to the shore but when I got there I saw it was a fire out on the water. At least, that's what it looked like, although I couldn't see what was burning out there. Then I saw it was moving along—a ship sailing against the wind. I knew right away it must be the 'fire ship' my father and his brothers had often talked about.

"It seemed to be a boat about 70 or 80 feet long ,standing high out of the water. It was a three-master, like one of those old ships you see in history books. I could see the tips of the spars. The sails were all bellied out and seemed to be blazing too."

There is no dearth along New Brunswick's north shore, of witnesses who claim to have seen the phantom ship, and many of them are reliable. A veteran minister, now serving the New Bandon circuit of the United Church, has told of seeing the flaming craft off Cape Breton Island two years ago.

"I was returning in company with three men, from conducting services on Port Hood Island. We were walking across the half-mile of ice to the mainland of Cape Breton Island. A mile or so to the east there was open water. Suddenly the sky was lighted up by a red glow and I saw this strange, blood-red ship sailing along the edge of the ice pack. It was moving northward. For almost 15 minutes we watched it. It looked exactly like a three-masted schooner ablaze from bow to stern."

A practical minded farmer described his glimpse of the ghost ship last December. "About a week before Christmas I was coming back from the barn after tending to the stock there. My attention was attracted by a red glow out on the water of the bay. At first I thought it was a house or barn burning across the bay but then I realized I would not be able to see that far—35 miles. Then I noticed it was moving slowly down the bay in a northeasterly direction. It did not seem more than three-quarters of a mile from shore. I could see the three masts and the sails apparently blazing and the hull looked like a bed of blazing embers."

Many and varied are the stories of the origin of the ghost ship. One account says it was a pleasure craft from a United States port, carrying a drunken party and a crew scarcely less intoxicated. The vessel drifted into Bay Chaleur and during a scuffle in the captain's cabin a lamp was upset and exploded. The ship caught fire and the entire company perished.

Another tale says the ship was an immigrant vessel bound for Quebec which had gotten off its course. Mistaking the bay for the St. Lawrence River, they entered. A bolt of lightning struck the craft, setting her afire. The burning vessel was grounded near the mouth of the Restigouche River but only two of those aboard, both children, made their way to shore. The others perished.

Other stories tell vaguely of a man-o'-war which blew up in Bay Chaleur during the war of 1812.

Several times, groups of fishermen, determined on investigation of the phantom, have manned their boats and put out to the mystery craft. Always it has eluded them, ever keeping the same distance like some mirage on the horizon. Because they believe it warns them of a coming storm, they dare not pursue too far.

Natural phenomenon or ghost, there are scores who will tell you they have glimpsed the fiery craft.

Suitable Eyewear Improves Appearance

You will occasionally hear a person complain that she objects to wearing a correction of her errors of vision because of the effect on her "looks." That argument no longer applies. The modern eye service considers appearance, which can now by correctly chosen eyewear be enhanced.

WOMAN'S WALK IS GIVE-AWAY OF CHARACTER

An ingenious "foot-rule of character" has been drawn up by M. Andre Perugia, the Paris shoe designer who is now visiting America. He claims to be able to tell a woman's character by a glance at her feet.

Here is his system:

An envious, down-at-the-mouth woman generally has a bunion.

A fearful, unsuccessful woman walks like Charlie Chaplin, toes turned out.

A timid and self-conscious woman places her feet close together when seated.

A woman who is pigeon-toed is dull, even stupid—but a woman who has sex-appeal walks with a firm even tread and carries herself with poise."

The Empress of Japan, the ex-Queen of Siam, Marlene Dietrich, Lily Pons and Marion Davies are among those for whom M. Perugia had designed shoes. He says that he makes his shoes to fit both the foot and the character.

Edmonton Grads Ready to Play Olympic Series

(By The Canadian Press)

EDMONTON May. 8—J Percy Page's wonder team, Edmonton Commercial Grads, are getting all set to sail across the Atlantic and show British and European teams just how women's basketball is played in the Canadian west.

But before they sail they will make one more defence—their third this season—of the international title they have held since 1923. Starting late this month, Grads will play a series with El Dorado, Ark., Lions with the Underwood trophy at stake.

They turned back the challenge of a quintet from the American School of Business at Des Moines, Ia., in two straight games and then in a best-of-five game series defeated Tulsa, Okla., Stenos three victories to one. Both the North American championship and the international titles were at stake in the series with Stenos.

With Page in complete charge, Grads will leave for their summer tour that will take them to several Old County and European cities and include exhibition games at the 1936 Olympic games in Berlin. It will be the fourth Olympics for the Grads to play exhibition games.

When the Olympic games were held in Paris in 1924, Grads were there for exhibition games. They were back when the Olympics were held at Amsterdam in 1928 and they went to Los Angeles for other exhibition games in 1932. Women's basketball has been included for games this year.

Through the years the personnel of the team has changed but under Page's direction it has remained a championship aggregation. He guided the team to the Alberta championship for the first time in 1915. They won the Canadian title for the first time in 1922. They haven't lost a series for either title since. They did not defend their Canadian title this year because of the European tour and Olympic exhibition games.

In the international sphere their record is almost as good. They lost only one international series—an exhibition series under both men's and women's rules in 1933 to a team from the Presbyterian College at Durant, Okla. The girls from the United States city made it in three in a row in a scheduled best-of-five series.

Mr. Page always travels with the team when they are on the road. The Olympic series this year comes as a climax to Page's final season as coach. Taking to the game as a hobby, he has been the mastermind of the squad for more than 20 years and is retiring at the close of this season.

Every girl on the team has been a "working girl"—practically all stenographers. Gladys Fry is the veteran of the present team with eight years playing to her credit. Babe Belanger and Doris Neale have seen several years playing. Noel MacDonald, centre, is the spearhead of the front-line attack. Helen Northup, Etta Dann and Mabel Munton complete the lineup.

The record for long-time service with Grads goes to Margaret MacBurney who retired this season. The sterling former captain played 158 games and scored 2,064 points for an average of 13.1 points per game. Her record is believed unequalled in any women's basketball league in the world.

The team's record is outstanding. They have won 414 of the 427 official and exhibition games they have played since taking the Alberta title in 1915. Their best winning streak was 78 straight games. They came near that mark several times but a single defeat intervened to make them start over again.

In the past 20 years the team has travelled over 80,000 miles and held 1,832 workouts with Page having the record of never having missed a game or a workout. Their most one-sided victory was chalked up in 1933 when they defeated University of Alberta 136-16. The average score for their 427 games: Grads, 48; Opponents, 19.

Dr. James Naismith, father of basketball, after seeing Grade in action, paid a high tribute to the coaching of Percy Page and his team. "In my opinion," he said, "Grads have the greatest basketball team that ever stepped out on a floor."

HUNTING-TOWER CASTLE

This stronghold, which is famous as the scene of the Raid of Ruthven, occupies a pleasant site in the parish of Tibbermore, on the right bank of the river Almond, about three miles to westward of Perth. It consisted originally of the single square eastern tower of the 15th century, to which was added at a later date a similar tower separated from it neighbour by a distance of feet. In the event of siege and the capture of one tower, the garrison could retire to the other by means of a moveable bridge across the battlements and so compel the enemy to resume the siege. This space between the towers long bore the name of The maiden's Leap from the circumstance of a daughter of an Earl of Ruthven having leapt across the gap when all but surprised by her mother in the embrace of a lover.

In the closing years of the 16th century the two towers were connected by means of a third addition and the whole formed into commodious mansion. In the time of William the Lyon, the manors of Ruthven and Tibbermore were in the ownership of a worrior named Swan, whose descendant, Sir William de Ruthven, wsa raised to the peerage of Lord Ruthven in 1488. The third baron was a principal in the assassination of the miscreant Rizzio. His second son and successor, William, was created Earl of Gowrie in 1581 He it was who, in the following year, perpetrated the Raid of Ruthven, for which he was beheaded in 1584. The Gowrie Conspiracy of 1600 cost the third Earl of Gowrie his life and the forfeiture of his castle and lands.

BEAUTY OF FIGURE

The lines that will show the new dresses to perfection are the lines of a body with every function regular, with well-toned and firm, gracefully moulded flesh.

It is, above all, the waist that matters. For health and for beauty.

It is the body's pivot, the centre of balance.

No restriction should be used to make the waist smaller. That belongs to the terrible tight-lacing era, happily long passed.

Neatness in size is an added attraction, but it is flexibility which should be aimed at for health and for beauty's sake.

GOOD FOR DIGESTION

A well-formed supple waistline makes breathing easire. It encourages the digestive organs.

That dragging backache will lessen and perhaps disappear if the muscles immediately above and below the waistline and strengthened by cultivating waist movements.

For beauty's sake a flexible waist—even if it is not a small one— is what this year's dresses demand.

Some women try to disguise a stiff and clumsy figure beneath loosely hung garments. And they are wise.

But how much more lovely such garments can be when their easy full swinging shows how supple is the body beneath.

No one is too young, and no one is too old to become waist-conscious.

The first thing to do is to sit on the floor, legs crossed, toes clasped, as if playing. "Hunt the slipper."

Sway gently to and fro to an imaginary tune, or better still, a real one. Then suddenly hands on hips, shoot the legs out straight in front, with toes pointed.

This incidentally, is not as easy movement, and requires a good deal of practising.

Sit upright, every muscle taut from chin to hip. Pause thus for a minute and breathe in.

As you breathe out, throw the whole weight of your trunk forward, relaxing each muscle and quite probably bumping your nose on your legs. It won't hurt.

Now rest for a few minutes, then, keeping the hips as firm as possible, turn the upper part of the body to one side—as far as you can—each attempt a few inches further.

Sit on the ground with legs far apart, and put one arm behind your head and try to touch the opposite knee.

One woman attempted this regularly every day for five months.

She succeeded at last, but long before she did the line of her waist was a thing to wonder at.

There are many other exercises. But the acid test of all those destined to improve the waist is that they should be rhythmical rather than strenuous, and breathing can be done easily and regularly during them.

If puffiness or shortness is felt stop the exercise for a day or so, and do deep breathing ones only.

Then the chest muscles will be strengthened and attention may be turned to the waist again.

Husky Leanders Canada's Hope For Boat Crown

HAMILTON, May 7—(C.P.)—You may see what is possibly the best eight-oared crew in the rowing world by going down to Hamilton Bay any evening and looking for the giants who pull out from the Leander Boat Club for a practice spin. These are Bob Hunter's national champions.

If they are not the greatest boatload under the sun, they come very close to being that and a great many experts in the business of rowing are wrong. The chances are they will reach Germany for the 1936 Olympic Games with a fanfare of publicity that leaves the rest of Canada's athletes relatively in the shade.

This happened in 1932 when Hunter's Leander crew was part of the Canadian Olympic team. Far from setting a new world record for the Olympic distance of 2,000 metres in the trials, the crew found itself the centre of attraction at Long Beach, the Pacific resort where the rowing races were conducted. Canada was rather track-minded in 1932, but California had both eyes on the eight Leander oar-pullers.

And so it may be again. Unless Sammy Richardson or some other track and field ace set things going with a world-record performance in the trials, or Phyllis Dewar establishes herself as a possible swimming champion, it will be the Leander crew that gets Berlin's attention in August.

The Hunter huskies were beaten at Los Angeles by a few feet in one of the closest international finals ever seen. University of California, representing United States, placed first; Italy's national crew was second; Leanders were third and Cambridge University, representing England, was fourth.

The margin between the first and second boats was about six feet, Leanders were about six feet behind Italy. Cambridge was within a foot or so of the Canadian boat. There was no open water showing between the first and fourth boats. It was an unforgettable picture.

The new Leander crew includes only three men who were in the 1932 boat and Hunter and others believe it to be immeasurably superior to that other eight. No one believes any other crew in Canada will come within boat-lengths of the Hamilton collection when the trials are held at Port Dalhousie, Ont., in June. That part of it is just a formality.

How Crew Shapes Up

Hunter's men average a little more than 190 pounds just now, six weeks before they expect to achieve peak condition. Some of the weight will come off in the rigorous training process, which includes pulling eight to 12 miles each evening on the Bay.

"They are very fast and they handle their blades beautifully. You won't see a better looking crew anywhere."

Here they are:

Stroke—Claude Saunders, height 6 feet, 2 inches; weight 190; age 24; a steel worker.

No. 1.—Harry Fry, height, 5 feet, 11 inches; weight 198; age 30, bookkeeper.

No. 2.—Tiny Matison, height, 6 feet, 3 inches; weight 199; age, 23; truck driver.

No. 4.—Ben Sharpe, height 6 feet 4 inches; weight, 190; age, 20 artist.

No. 5.—Joe Harris, height, 5 feet, 11 inches; weight, 188; age, 23; salesman.

No. 6.—Dan Boal, height, 6 feet, 1 inch; weight 174; age, 28; store clerk.

No. 7.—Cedric Liddell, height 6 feet, 3 1-2 inches; weight, 178; age, 23; salesman.

HOME DECORATOR

In almost every home there is one particular room that is decidedly neglected. It is in the same relation to the rest of your house as your last year's hat bears to your new winter coat . . . so dated that it is now beyond the pale. And we'll wager that this particular beauty-starved room is the same in almost every home . . . It's the bathroom every time. It is so easy to just hang the towels on the rack, put the soap in the dish, call it quits and get to work on the new dining room drapes. It is logical that more care be given the rooms which are the most lived in, but the bleak fate of the average bath is a blot on the escutcheon of the average housewife. And attention it is getting too, as a walk thr ugh the house furnishing departments of our larger stores will show you. You will go home wailing for . . . or laden with . . . with wherewithal to do your best for the family orphan.

These days there are such grand things you can do in the way of fixing up the bathroom. The old idea that white and more white is the only thing . . . the only sanitary fitting thing . . . for the bath is a tale of the past. Color makes the modern bath. Not too dark a major color since you will want good light reflection values. Here beards are shaved, faces are powdered and there must be light and plenty of it to avoid butchered chinns or floury noses.

For example, get some gray paint . . . there are shades and shades of it, each more striking and appealing than the last . . . but be careful, get a warm soft gray with plenty of depth. Your paint dealer will help you gladly in your choice. Picture the walls of soft gray paint; dark iron gray linoleum on the floor lined off with a thin dark red-stripe; your ceilings matching the walls; the ever important fixtures a dark red . . . and this can easily be managed with your own two hands by the means of a reliable lacquer or enamel; your towels monogrammed in dark red . . . this last needn't be an expensive item either—plain white towelling is not expensive and the monogramming can be done at home; and the last with streaks and splashes of your touch—an oiled silk shower curtain same red patterning it off.

There you are. A room as invigorating as your morning shower and as cheerful as a day in June.

The painting job isn't a wearisome task by any means. You can have your painter do it, or do it yourself. It takes care . . . not inborn talent. Begin at the top. Scrub the old surfaces "clean as a whistle" and rinse off all soapy film. Scrape off loose scales of old paint and fill the cracks or holes with patching plaster. Let it dry; put on a coat of wall-primer, dip your brush into a can of semi-gloss paint or enamel and proceed to a smooth, satiny, tight finish that washes almost as easily as a China plate. Simple as your A. B. C's.

Truly, providing a lovely, colorful bathroom in faultless finish is one of the nicest compliments you can pay a guest in your home and it will be a source of constant satisfaction to you and your family.
