THE BURTON TRAGEDY.

BY LEROY GIBBER.

Continued

"Yes quite right dear" I answered, kissing her forehead in rather a shame-faced way as I left her. For it was exceedingly repugnant to my feelings to have to take her money to satisfy this other woman, even as a loan to Mr. Jones. I wished he had not set me this task, but of course it was not for me to gainsay him. I had found Alice in the inner drawing-room; so, not wishing to pass again through the outer one, where Mrs. Ellis was, I opened the nearest of the French windows which was seldom used, and burst out on to the garden path, brushing past a clump of evergreens which grew right up against the window.

To my great fright, I almost fell against a man in hiding amongst them. Suppressing a scream and determined not to let him go without knowing who it was, I dragged him out—for he was a little man—into what faint light there was from the lamp rays. It was Higgins.

"'Ere, 'old, 'ard, missus," said he, in a low voice, "I ain't a-burgling. If I like to do a little spying as well as you, I s'pose there ain't no call to kick up a shindy."

"Oh, if its only you," I said, disdainfully, "it's all right of course. Stop," I went on, suddenly, though indeed he was not attempting to move, "Mr. Jones is here, and he might like to ask you a few questions."

Away at the other end of the lawn, well under the trees, so that it was only by straining my eyes I could distinguish them, were the two persons I had left.

"Ah, he might, might he?" answered Higgins, drily. "Why shouldn't he have a turn at the pump, eh?" Without answering this vague question, I ran across the lawn and put the money silently into Mr. Jones' hands. The woman took it greedily, not paying much heed, I thought, to a few words of advice from Mr. Jones, who particularly warned her against appearing in this part of the world again. "Mind, I've befriended you this time because I admit that you haven't been well treated," he concluded, "but I consider that we have now done as much as you have any right to expect, for after all my ward is a poor man, and it would have done you little good to marry him—while you must see yourself the impropriety of haunting the house of a perfectly inoffensive lady like my niece."

"Oh, I quite understand how the case lies," answered the woman in her hardest tone of mockery. "And I appreciate your motives only a little less than I do your money. Good evening; and good evening, madam."

She turned from one to the other with a deep bend, and walked down the avenue. Her dress and carriage were so ladylike that I guessed that the lodge porter let her in and out without suspicion, but I suggested to Mr. Jones, as she disappeared, that the man should be warned against doing so in the future. "Oh, well, we'll see about that to-morrow," he said, wearily. "It's rather hard upon us old fogies that the young fellow should bring down this explosive sort of lady upon our heads. I feel as if I had been facing a she bear, and she had left the mark of her claws upon me." He looked inexpressibly tired, worried and haggard. I thought I would not tease him to interrogate Higgins until next day; but as we drew near the house he saw a movement among the shrubs and clutched at my arm. "I am nervous to-night," he said, hoarsely. "I fancied I saw a face thrust out between the evergreens."

"It was no fancy," said I, as I laughed reassuringly. "It is the night watchman at the brewery. I thought you would like to ask him some questions, so I told him to wait. But you are too tired to-night, Mr. Jones. Put it off until to-morrow morning." The thought of another harrassing interview was too much for him. He did not say another single word in answer, but leaned on my arm so heavily that I got frightened, and motioning to Higgins with my hand to go away, hurried Mr. Jones into the house.

As soon as I had seen him seat himself, in an attitude of intense weariness, I ran out again to speak to Higgins. But I was too late. Chuckling to himself in a mocking manner, like a little wiry imp of mischief, the night-watchman, lantern in hand, was vaulting over the wall into his own domain, and vouchsafed no word in answer to my calls.

CHAPTER XVI.

The rest of the evening was passed most uncomfortably by all of us. Poor Mrs. Ellis, who felt that this sudden influx of friends of Alice's was a tacit reproach to her guardianship, was cold and distant to me, alternately dignified and humble to Mr. Jones. He himself was evidently worn out by fatigue and anxiety, which he in vain tried to dissemble by a forced gaiety quite unlike his habitual cheerfulness. Alice, in whose mental condition the improvement seemed to show hour by hour, was depressed by her uncle's manner, and also by certain misgivings of her own, which she confided to me, much to my consternation.

It was quite late in the evening; I was shutting up the piano after having had my efforts to wile away the melancholy of the assemblage by music very much "sat upon." Suddenly I felt Alice's hand upon my shoulder, and looking round with a start I saw that her great blue eyes were bright with excitement, and that the dull and dangerous apathy which had alarmed me so much was gone—for the time at least. "Winnie," she whispered, "come into my room when we go up stairs, I want to speak to you."

When, therefore, we all separated for the night, I stopped at Alice's door when I had taken my candle into my own room. She dragged me in quickly, and shut the door with one of the old, frightened glances around. I put my arm reassuringly around her waist. "Come, Alice," I cried, laughingly, "You have nothing to be afraid of now. The person or persons who played you those cruel tricks won't try them while Mr. Jones is about, you may be quite sure."

After Harry's confession, of course I had the best possible reason to believe we were safe from any more nocturnal frights, and my confidence gave her courage. Recovering a calmer manner she told me what was troubling her.

"Do you know, Winnie," she said, in a low voice, "I am afraid I have been treating poor Egbert very badly."

What could I say? How could I sympathize with her, having such good reason to fear that he had been treated by us all a great deal too well?

On the other hand, I dared not, in her present excitable state, and without consulting Mr. Jones, add to her trouble by any hint of my own knowledge or suspicions. I could only listen while she went on with great earnestness:—

Build Up.

When the system is run down a person becomes an easy prey to Consumption or Scrofula. Many valuable lives are saved by using Scott's Emulsion as soon as a decline in health is observed.

Artificial Quicksands.

Suppose we take a certain quantity of quicksand, dry it artificially, and then try to make it into quicksand again. Put it into a box and pour water on it carefully. Instantly the water is soaked up, and if we measure the volume or weigh the sand we shall see that it takes up a quantity of water that measures 30 per cent of its own volume, or 20 per cent by weight, the rest remaining upon the layer of sand. If a little hole is now pierced in the bottom of the box pure water will run out, the sand merely forming a kind of immovable filter, and if the box is turned upside down the sand remains in its position as a solid mass. If the conditions of experiment, however, are reversed, and the water is put into the vessel and into it dry sand is sifted in a thin stream, while the vessel is constantly shaken lightly, the thick but easily flowing compound known as quicksand is obtained. If, however, the vessel be allowed to rest the mass again settles down into the conditions obtained by the first experiment.

Tillman Made Her Weep.

"I heard a good story on Ben Tillman at Chamberlin's, in Washington, the other day which I have never heard told down this way before," said a well-known railroad man. "When Tillman was making his tirade against Cleveland in the Senate, the story goes, he noticed an old woman in the gallery who seemed convulsed with grief. The further his speech progressed the more intense seemed the old lady's sobbing.

"The South Carolina senator was curious to know why she wept so bitterly, and at the conclusion of his fierce harangue he sought her out in the gallery and asked the cause. 'Well, I'll tell you, sir,' she replied between her sobs. 'Last month a heavy frost ruined my garden, and only two weeks ago my husband died. Then my little jackass Ned, who used to wake me up mornings a-brayin', took sick an' died, too, and when I heard you a-talkin' it reminded me so much of him that I jest couldn't keep from cryin'."—Atlanta Journal.

WAS A MANIAC.

Unpleasant Traveling Companion of a Member of Parliament.

A Swiss maniac, who was traveling from his native mountains, entered a train bound for Paris somewhere on the southeastern frontier, says the London "Telegraph," his intention being to go on from the capital to Dieppe, and there to take the boat for Newhaven. Two gentlemen, one of whom is a member of parliament, were in the same compartment as the countryman of William Tell, and soon after his entrance they noticed that his eyes were full of strange fire and that his language was incoherent.

He began to talk about his fear of being murdered and shrieked several times at the phantasmal form of an imaginary assassin whom he pictured as bending over him with a knife. The deputy and his companion did their best to calm the man and succeeded for a time in doing so. While in the act of dozing, however, they were awakened by terrible cries and a tremendous noise. The Swiss had pulled open the door of the carriage and broken the window by the violence of his movement. He was standing outside on the footboard, crying "murder," and preparing to crash headforemost into the darkness while the train was going at full speed. His traveling companions managed to drag him back, but he attacked them with the utmost fury, and would undoubtedly have inflicted on them grievous bodily injury had not the guard, summoned by the alarm signal, arrived in time to assist in overpowering him. The Swiss, in whose possession were two loaded revolvers, was taken in charge by the police at Lyons.

AMATEUR CYCLIST.

Wants Bicycle Riders and the Public to Know that he was Cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

TORONTO (Special), Oct. 5.—People generally, who take an interest in cycling, as well as amateurs and professional everywhere, will remember a name familiar in sporting events—Mr. Louis H. Bounsell, who resides at 373 King Street East, this city. Bicycle riders will be especially pleased to learn that his reappearance this season in good form is due to his entire recovery from serious kidney trouble which had for a long time been interfering with his work. He desires all his friends as well as the public to know that his recovery is entirely due to using three boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills.

The Canadian Pacific railway earnings for the week ending Sept. 30 were $509,000; for the same period last year, $588,000; decrease, $79,000.

It Saved Our Child.

"My little daughter, three and a half year old, suffered three years with Eczema. Her little body was covered with the itching rash, and doctors did no good. Four boxes of Chase's Ointment entirely cured and saved our child. Her skin is clear and not a sign of rash is to be seen." Andrew Aiton, Hartland, N. B. Mr. Aiton is one of thousands benefitted by this unfailing cure for piles and skin diseases.

Among the suggestions for the celebration of the Queen's long reign is one that there should be a review in Hyde Park of the colonial and other forces.

Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Chase's Pills have gained popularity because they are a specific for the uric acid condition, prevent Bright's disease, cure Rheumatism and all Catarrhal conditions of the Kidneys and Bladder. They do this because they possess remarkable alterative, tonic and deuretic properities, exerting a wonderfully soothing influence on irritated or inflamed mucos membrance of the kidneys or bladder. One pill a dose. 25 a box. The cheapest medicine in the world.

Proposed Only Twice.

Beethoven never married. But it was from no defect of sensibility that the tribulations which were distributed among many successive housekeepers were not heaped upon the devoted head of a wife. If love be a disease, Beethoven was always ill, or at best but convalescent. No less than forty ladies, save four, has he immortalized by his dedications to them. To Bettina von Arnim—Goethe's Bettina—for whom he long cherished a hopeless passion, he once said, after trying over a composition which he had just written, "I made that for you; you inspired me with it. I saw it written in your eyes," and this is but a specimen of the gallantries to which he was addicted.

Twice at least he proposed—on one occasion to the lady who, as he found to his mortification was already the fiancee of his friend Hummel. That marriage would have saved him from a good many worries, is certain enough; for it must be allowed that, as Emil Naumann delicately puts it, he "did not possess any aptitude for household management."—Blackwood's Magazine.

We have a large stock, on hand and to arrive, at these well known MANURES, and can refer purchaser to many of our very best farmers who have been using them for years with very gratifying results.

We can also supply the same goods (Ground Slag) as offered by our would-be competitors as "English Fertilizers" at at least 20 per cent less price than they now ask for it, but at the same time we would not advise its use, believing that THE GENUINE ENGLISH MANURES AS SOLD ONLY BY US are much the best value.
