ADLAI VOTES, JOKES

LIBERTYVILLE, Ill. (AP)—Adlai E. Stevenson voted Tuesday at nearby Half Day, where he spent about five minutes in the voting booth and an hour exchanging banter with a crowd of wellwishers. Stevenson was accompanied by his son Borden, who was voting for the first time.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	2 ♦	2 ♠	Pass
4 ♠

Opening lead—king of diamonds.

One of the many forms the elimination play takes is illustrated by South's play in today's hand. The elimination play, also called the strip and end play, is a weapon in declarer's bag of tricks which can be called into frequent use. It is a method of play by which declarer avoids the loss of a trick which might otherwise go to the defense.

South's jump to four spades was perfectly proper, being based on North's voluntary bid of two spades over the intervening bid. A free raise made in the face of an overcall usually runs around 8 or 10 points, as opposed to the 6 to 9 point range without an overcall.

West led the king of diamonds and decided to continue with the ace, declarer trumping the second lead. There were four possible losers—three clubs and the diamond. If West had the ace of clubs a loser could be cut off, but if East had it the contract was in danger.

As can be seen, East had the ace, but South managed to avoid three club losers. After ruffing the diamond, South drew two rounds of trump, led a low heart to the king and trumped dummy's last diamond.

The A-Q of heart were cashed, West discarding a diamond and dummy a club. South then led the fourth round of hearts and instead of trumping it in dummy discarded another club.

East won the heart, but his position was hopeless. His side had two tricks but could get only one more. Playing the ace of clubs would establish dummy's king; leading a heart would permit another club discard from dummy as declarer trumped. There was no way out.

The heart trick which declarer unnecessarily lost was a kind of sacrifice play. It lost a trick but gained two, which is good business in any language.

The strip and end play followed the standard pattern. Suits numbers one and two (spades and diamonds) were cleared, and suit number three (hearts) was used for the throw-in to compel the lead of suit number four (clubs).

BEDTIME STORIES

Yowler's Bad Temper

Guard well your temper. Do not let.
It lead to words you will regret.
—Old Mother Nature.

Bobby Coon had sought refuge in a rocky ledge where once he had had a den. He had thought to use that den again. He couldn't. Some one else was using it. It was Yowler the Bobcat.

He even put a paw inside with all the big claws extended to try to get hold of Bobby.

Now Yowler was feeling very much out of sorts. He didn't like it at all that Bobby Coon had come to that ledge. You see the hunters who had been after Bobby had been led to that rocky ledge by a Dog. The hunters had known they couldn't get Bobby in among those rocks and so had given up and had gone away. But there was no knowing when they would return. It was now the dreadful hunting season and those hunters were likely to return any night hoping to find Bobby Coon somewhere in the neighborhood. Yowler didn't want hunters around that ledge.

Not being able to use his old den because owler was in it, Bobby had squeezed through a norrow opening and into a much smaller and narrower den. He would spend the rest of the night and all of the next day there.

Yowler came out of his den. He came to the entrance to Bobby's small den. He snarled and spat the way a Cat does when angry. You know Yowler really is a big Cat. "The sooner you leave this ledge the better" he snarled. "You had no business to come over here. You brought those hunters. They hadn't been near here until you brought them." Yowler was in a bad temper and it grew worse as he talked.

Bobby shivered as he listened to Yowler snarling and spitting with his face close to the entrance. He knew Yowler couldn't get in, but still he was afraid. He was afraid because he knew that the big Cat with the short tail might hide among those rocks and wait for him to come out. "With that Dog chasing me this was the only place I could come to and be safe," said Bobby.

"So you think you're safe here" snarled Yowler. "You maybe are in that hole, but just let me catch you outside. You'll wish you had never thought of this place ever here. I'll be waiting for you. You may be sure of that." Yowler's voice began with a snarl and ended with a growl. His stub of a tail was twitching back and forth as only the tail of a Cat can twitch. He even put a paw inside with all the big claws extended to try to get hold of Bobby. Bobby backed away until he could get no farther. As long as he kept back there out of Yowler's reach he would be safe. He knew this now and it made him feel a little better. He hoped that Yowler would get tied of showing off his bad temper and would go away.

"If he will just leave me alone, I won't bother him," thought Bobby. "My, my, my, what a temper he has I never before have heard any one snarl and spit the way he does."

When he found he couldn't reach Bobby Coon with those sharp claws of his, Yowler so lost his temper that he screeched with rage and disappointment. It was a dreadful sound to hear. It made Bobby Coon shiver and shake. Yes, sir, it did so.

"I'm glad I haven't a temper like that," thought Bobby.

THIRD ROCKET LAUNCHED

FORT CHURCHILL, Man. (CP) After waiting for three hours for skies to clear srom blizzard conditions, scientists Monday unleashed an American-built Aerobee-Hi rocket from a steel-covered launching tower. The 30-foot scientific rocket soared more than 100 miles into the air to become the third successful launching of the United States International Geophysical Year project 12 miles east of this sub-Arctic Canadian, miles north of Winnipeg.
