HALF-HANGED PEOPLE

STORIES OF PERSONS TO WHOM HANGING HAS NOT BEEN FATAL.

The Curious Record Left by a Victim of the Time of the Seventh Century of France—A Story of Dramatic Merit From Wesley's Magazine.

To have been inadequately hanged by due legal process or private animosity is, no doubt, at present a rare situation. Science, with her marvelous powers, with the numberless commodities that enrich human experience, has made half-hanged persons scarce, or (as the dealers say) "pretty unique." But the drop was not always improved, and in these times more than one victim of misfortune returned to society after having undergone the last penalty of the law in Scotland, at least, a sportsmanlike sentiment spared half-hanged Maggie Dickson, though her sentence had not really been carried out in accordance with the intentions of her judge.

But the stories of the two most celebrated half-hanged people are more romantic than that of poor Maggie Dickson. There may even be skeptics who decline to accept the following narrative, though provided by the sufferer himself, Michael Hamilton, serving in the Scottish forces of Charles VII. of France. In holy week, 1429, when Jeanne d'Arc was just being examined by a congress of divines, Michael Hamilton, with other gentlemen of the sword, was quartered near Clisson in Brittany. The Bretons were in sympathy with the English, or, at all events, greatly preferred them to the Scots. A Breton spy was captured by Hamilton and his friends, who at first extracted his information doubtless in the usual manner, and then hanged him. What they had learned from their prisoner induced them to believe that it was "time for them to go," and go they did, "with what feet they had," to employ a pleasing Greek idiom. In a flight Michael Hamilton, impeded by the weight of his armor, was taken by the peasants. Among them was the son of the spy whom the Scots had hanged. In a revengeful spirit this youth insisted that Michael should undergo a penalty worthy of his blood, and he hanged him. "If you want a thing well done do it yourself," is the maxim on which the son of the spy acted. He personally hanged Michael Hamilton, and, not without every attention to the details, now, Michael, when he saw that he could not escape his pursuers, had made a vow of a pilgrimage to the shrine of St. Katherine of Fierbois, in whose church, as will be remembered, Jeanne d'Arc discovered strangely the buried sword with five crosses on the blade. Now on the night when Michael was suspended, a voice became audible to the cure of the parish, bidding him go and collect the body of the man who had been hanged, and bring it back to the cure. Collecting the local clergy and clad in canonicals, the cure went to the gibbet and let down Michael. Beholding this, and still revengeful, the son of the slain spy hit Michael on the ear with a sword. Since the loss he recovered, made his pilgrimage to Fierbois and told his tale, which may be read in the "Miracles de Madame St. Katherine de Fierbois."

Curious as was this affair it yields in dramatic merit to a story told in Wesley's Arminian Magazine and in a pamphlet. A young man, walking to the house of his brother, a yeoman, found the inn at a neighboring town very full. He shared the room of a merchant who was openly counting on his money. Having occasion to visit the garden, and also borrow a knife, he accepted the loan of a knife from the merchant. On returning to his room he found the merchant gone. He went to bed, slept, rose early, walked to the garden, and the youth fled in the afternoon for murdering the merchant. In his pocket was that tradesman's knife, and between blade and handle was a guinea of William and Mary. At the inn the merchant's empty bed was stained with blood, and through the merchant's body was nowhere to be found, the young man was condemned for murder and hanged in chains on his brother's farm. Here a swain observed that the body moved; it was cut down. Life was reinstated, and the youth fled to sea. Taken by Spaniards in South America, he rose to be warden of the jail, and while in enjoyment of that office recognized among some English prisoners the person for whose murder he had suffered. The fact was that the merchant, while the youth was absent in the garden, discovered that he was bleeding freely from a vein which had been opened that day. He hurried to the surgeon in the dark, was seized by a press gang, served his Majesty in a ship of war, was taken by the Spaniards, and at last met in a jail in South America the very man who had been hanged for murdering him in England.

Persons who are unable to accept this legend may prefer that of Michael Hamilton, or again, those who boggle at Michael may believe the tale published by Wesley. Both are examples of the very mixed luck which falls to the lot of mortals in this troublesome world.—London Telegraph.

The Little Ark in Britain.
If the severe frost should continue much longer, Macgillivray's description of the little ark as a bird of rare occurrence in Great Britain will be amended. Mr. James Murray, of Deptford, writes, "When on a large off Greenwich College, I picked up a specimen of a little ark which had evidently been driven up the river by the severity of the weather. It must have been driven against the ropes and dropped dead on the deck. It was quite warm when found."—London Daily News.

A CHILD'S QUESTIONS.

How does the bread that mother bakes? Give strength when I am weak, Make for my body dimpled flesh, And scurlet for my cheeks?

How does the milk that Daisy gives, Flowing gently by? Change to drops of crimson blood, That through my body flow?

How does the air, the pure, sweet air, Blow gently by? Laugh right merrily in my voice, And sparkle in my eye?—Mary F. Watts, in S. S. Times.

THE SPARROWS AND THE CHIPMUNK.

An Account of a Very Prolonged Battle Between Them.
A young naturalist who is a close observer of birds tells this little story: "One morning last summer, while walking through one of our parks, I was attracted by a tremendous clattering from a clump of bushes near the pathway. It sounded as if a hundred birds were having a fight over their breakfast for sparrows think that a few worms and a juicy bug is worth making a great fuss about.

"I walked quickly and stealthily up to the bushes and peeped in. It was not a worm which caused the commotion, but something bigger. A large field of English sparrows were flying about, screaming as if they had gone mad and pecking savagely at intervals at some small animal, which was running about on the ground. It was a poor little red chipmunk who had excited their wrath. He was running back and forth, evidently trying to get away from his tormentors. It was of no use, for he was closely surrounded by them, and he evidently was getting weak in the unequal struggle.

"So I drove away the sparrows and tried to rescue the miserable little squirrel. When the birds flew away the chipmunk still lay upon the ground and seemed unable to move. I picked him up in my hands. He was in a pitiable condition. The sparrows had pulled nearly every hair out of his tail. One of his eyes was entirely pecked out and he was covered with cuts and wounds. His legs were gnawed little sparrows had pecked and beaten him.

"Poor little chipmunk! He was nearly dead and evidently in such suffering that he had to be put out of his misery. We had Mr. Chipmunk stuffed and put him up on the mantel-shelf for an ornament. He looks much more happy than he did on the day the quarrelsome little sparrows pecked his life away. But what it was that excited their wrath Mr. Chipmunk never told."

Faure's Unaffected Cordiality.
Mr. Felix Faure continues, says our Paris correspondent, to win public favor by his unaffected, hearty manners. He refuses to be bound by the Protocol now on questions of international politeness and public ceremonial. The President, he says, should be his own protocol, particularly when he wishes to act according to the dictates of his heart and of common sense. Thus at the ball at the Hotel de Ville he left Mme. Pomelle, wife of the Prefect of the Seine, to be taken to the buffet by a Minister, and gave his arm to the homely Mme. Champeroux, his wife's maid. He is constantly rebelling against the tutelage in which M. Pomelle, the Prefect of the Seine, tries to keep them. The courteous instincts of the President were also shown in the way in which he received at the dinner the old boys of the Polytechnic School, where he was educated. Those who called on him were his classmates and are now all business men.

The senior old boy, M. Chapron, a civil engineer attached to the School of Arts and Crafts, delivered an address. It was ended, M. Felix Faure said: "Do me the pleasure of making yourselves at home and putting away ceremony. Let us smoke a cigar in remembrance of our school days: drink a flagon of beer and have a glass of wine. But I expect all of you to use the old familiar 'this and 'that' in talking to me; otherwise I shall feel on stilts, and I hate nothing more than that."—London News.

HER MAJESTY.

She wears a royal golden crown, Our little, laughing, six-faced queen; The clothing earliest seen—how brown—Are bright as summer starlight's gleam.

She wears a scepter o'er us all, And we obey each proud command; For we are held in awe by her thrall By that imperial, dimpled hand.

Her robes of state are pure as snow, In every hour she flits a throne; In all the land she has no foe—The name of rebel is unknown.

Her loyal subjects, low and high, Full many a costly tribute bring; Her husband's most illustrious king, The glories of her kingdom, I sing.

Around my neck her soft arms twine, My song is sweetened by her carol; Her sweet, fresh lips are pressed to mine, Oh, baby—little queen of girls!

Musical Typewriter.
An ingenious young woman of New Orleans is about to bring to completion one of the most unique musical instruments perhaps ever invented. It is nothing more or less than a simple device with strings and a sounding plate to be attached underneath the key-board of a typewriting machine, in such a manner that when a letter is struck by the operator a note of music will be produced instead of the ordinary click-click noise which sometimes becomes so very disagreeable. Of course, it is only once in a hundred times, no doubt, that such a combination of keys will be struck as to produce any real harmony of sound, still each note will be distinctly musical, and the invention will probably greatly enhance the use and value of the typewriter. It is expected that a patent will soon be applied for.

A New Way of Catching Rabbits.
In some parts of Australia the tank trap is growing greatly in favor for the extermination of rabbits. It consists of a tank containing water at the bottom, into which the rabbits jump, and from which they are unable afterwards to escape. It, however, is successful on a large scale only during the dry months of the year. A couple of stations using seven tanks recently captured 23,000 rabbits in one week, and it is calculated that they can destroy 30,000 a month regularly.—New York Advertiser.

The King and the Page.
The great Frederick was very fond of snuff. He had a box of it put on every mantel piece in the palace. One day he was in his page, helping himself liberally. He said nothing, but a little while afterward he told the boy to bring him the box. "Take a pinch," said the king; "How do you find it?" "Excellent, sire," said the boy. "And the box?" "Superb, sire," said the king. "Very well," returned Frederick, "keep it then; it does not hold enough for two."

Two Opinions.
Mr. Morally Good—My dear Mr. there's no earthly use of my joining the church.
Pastor—But there's a heavenly use, my dear friend.

Pains in the Joints

Caused by Inflammatory Swelling
A Perfect Cure by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"It affords me much pleasure to recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla. My son was afflicted with swelling in the joints, accompanied with great pain so that he could not get up stairs to bed without crawling on hands and knees. I was very anxious about him, and having read Hood's Sarsaparilla Cures so much about Hood's Sarsaparilla, I determined to try it, and it cured him in four weeks, of which entirely cured him." Mrs. G. A. Lutz, Ottawa, Ontario.

EPPS'S COCOA

BREAKFAST—SUPPER.
"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided for our breakfast and supper a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure food and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.
