TIMES GUARDIAN,
Truro

I was moved to apologize for having added to his perplexities. He waved me aside. "Oh, cracky, I don't want to lose old Martin his place, and I bet you're right about it. That old"—Bentley paused and drew two long dashes in the air—"he's capable of anything; besides," his voice sinking to a graver note, "I'd 'bout made up my mind to take the jump anyhow. It's just as well. The system's broken down. I never thought she caved in a hair-breadth but once, and I guess I was wrong then. Anyhow, she never did it again, and one swallow don't make a summer. Goodby. I might as well go."

He began to look for his hat in a pre-occupied way. I got it from under the sofa for him, and he left.

Two days later I received this telegram:

The country saved. B. BENTLEY.

This was followed by a note asking me to let him bring his "girl" up to see me. I doubted whether Linnie Martin cared as much to come as he cared to have her, but her father and I had always been good friends—that is, we had always taken particular pains to be civil to each other and to exchange confidences about the weather when, as might happen twice a month, our paths crossed—so I hoped this would in some measure neutralize the dislike of me that the recital of my amiable influence upon her destiny would naturally inspire.

Bentley brought her to the flat very soon, staying only a few minutes himself, but taking pains to assure me that the office was perfectly in the dark as to the outcome of his courtship and that all the affectation of indifference could do was being done to soothe Mr. Higgins. "That is," said Bentley, pointing with his thumb, "she's doing just like she always did, and I'm doing just like her." Next week, he said, she would leave the office.

Bentley wore a new aspect. There were, though my report of the interview so far may not show it, touches of dignity and deference and reticence in his manner and expression that, though they did not change his familiar guise or tone to a casual glance or a half-listening ear, were novel and pleasing to an acuter observation.

He soon declared that he must go out to "see a man" and said he would come back for Linnie in half an hour. He came to me, and, with a speaking gaze charged with confidential communications, wrung my hand till he brought tears to my eyes and to his own. He made it clear that he was giving me the glory of his success, an honor to which I had not the least claim, but I understood the state of mind in which it pleased him to lavish his willing gratitude to things in general upon some definite and tangible object.

Then he left me alone with the small woman who had been causing all this bother.

You could see in every line of her attitude and in every detail of her neat

Now-a-days nearly every woman rides a bicycle. The majority of these who do not have failed to compass its difficulties because of nervousness. Many women after taking innumerable lessons, and trying vainly to conquer the wheel for weeks, have finally given it up as a hopeless task for this one reason.

In nearly every instance severe nervousness in women may be traced to weakness and disease of the delicate and important organs distinctly feminine. No class of disorders so torture a woman's nerves or break them down so quickly and effectually. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a sure, speedy and permanent cure for all troubles of this description. It acts directly on the sensitive organs concerned, making them strong, healthy, vigorous and elastic. It allays inflammation, heals ulceration, soothes pain and tones and builds up the nerves. It stops exhausting drains. It banishes the indispositions that precede maternity and makes baby's advent easy and almost painless. It insures the little new-comer's health and an ample supply of nourishment. It transforms weak, nervous invalids into strong, healthy, nerve-steady women. Thousands have testified to its marvelous merits. An honest dealer will not offer a substitute.

"My wife was troubled with female weakness for several years," writes James Caswell, Esq., of Ocheetree, Johnson Co., Kans. (P. O. Box 61). "She had bearing-down pains and pain in back. Her periods were irregular, she would have fainting spells, the best doctors did her no good. By the time my wife had taken four bottles of the 'Favorite Prescription' she was completely cured. No more pain. Her monthly periods are regular, she is stout and strong. When she commenced taking your medicines she weighed about 125 pounds—now she weighs 160 pounds."

Send 51 one-cent stamps, to cover cost of customs and mailing only, to the World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y., for a paper-covered copy of Doctor Pierce's Common Sense Medical Advice;—Cloth binding 50 cents. A whole medical library in one 1000-page volume.

appropriate gown and jacket and hat what an example of the discreet virtues and the pleasing properties she was born to be.

I gazed upon her with appreciative admiration mingled with fear, for I was not inspired with the greatest confidence in her powers of conversation, though she had got through her greetings nicely enough. I did her injustice. She was entertaining. Despite all her innate sense of propriety and reserve, she was sufficiently moved by her engagement to want to talk about it and "him." And this state of mind always may be confidently counted upon to furnish entertainment of one kind or another.

She first said prettily that Mr. Bentley had told her how kind I had been in thinking about her father. "It would be awful bad for pa to lose his place," she said, and I must explain that the written words do much injustice to the effect of her soft speech. "I think it will be better for me to stop going there as soon as I can, and then Mr. Higgins—if he doesn't see me to remind him—he'll forget all about—about what he didn't like," and she looked down and carefully measured off small sections of her pocket handkerchief and flushed a little.

I was struck with her comprehension of Higgins' childishness, typical hard hearted business potentate that he was, and said so.

Her color rose and faded a time or two before she said, as she measured her handkerchief yet more scrupulously:

"Mr. Bentley says you were very kind to him; that you helped him get that—that desk," and she looked up with a slight, shy smile.

Yes, I said; I thought I knew Mr. Bentley's designs some time before she did. I began to see that it would be like stopping a process of nature to take her away from this subject.

"I didn't know them till two days ago," she said, looking attentively at

He brought her to the flat, the toes of the boots crossed in front of her and as if she had more in her mind than she was saying. I waited. "I felt—I don't know how."

"Did you fall in love at first sight, too, as Mr. Bentley did?" She shook her head in silence. "No'm," she said after a moment. "I thought he was the—the plainest gentleman in the office when I first went there, though, of course"—raising her voice a little—"I could see he was very fine looking, but I didn't know how smart he was then and how everybody thought of him. That isn't what makes me care for him, though," she added quickly.

"Well, now," I asked judiciously, "what does make you care for him? That will be very interesting to hear." This scientific method of inquiry seemed to suit her own sense of the serious value of the investigation. She turned her head on one side and looked at me with an expression of intent intellectual preoccupation, as a pigeon might look if it gave its mind to mathematics.

"I don't think I can tell exactly," she said at last, with an inflection that recognized the mystery and novelty of this inability. "At least," she went on painstakingly and slowly, "of course I ought to care for him when he's so—so nice, but I don't know that I can tell just what made me think about it first, only he acted so queer. Sometimes for a long time"—She stopped, cogitated, then went on: "Sometimes it seemed as if he felt one way and sometimes as if he didn't; that made me think about him at first, I suppose, and then he just went on acting queer all the time."

The system—was not this a disclosure that the system had done its work after all?

"And you went on thinking about him more and more," I said. "Mr. Bentley did not think you thought about him at all."

"He doesn't think so now," said Linnie Martin. "I didn't care for him—much—till—until he asked me, and I don't think gentlemen ought to know—ought to know everything."

The Dangers of Mormonism.

Any one who ever lived for any great length of time in Utah when it was a territory knows only too well that the gentiles found it to their interest not to criticize too adversely the autocracy of Brigham Young. Dr. Robinson would not be "counseled" to refrain from comment. One beautiful moonlight night a man came to his house and told him that a man had been kicked by a mule "down on the State road," and that his leg was broken. He was suffering the greatest agony and needed the services of a surgeon. Would the doctor not come to his relief? Mrs. Robinson pleaded with her husband not to go. He laughed at her fears, and went. One block from his house he was assinated by a blow on the head with some dull instrument and a shot from a pistol. His murderer was never apprehended.—Ruth Everett in Arena.

RAILROAD....

KIDNEY A Disease Peculiar to Railroad Men, which is readily Cured by Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Did it ever occur to you that most railroad men die of kidney disease?

Such is the fact, however, and the disease is known among railroaders as "railroad kidney."

The first and most marked symptom is a weak, lame and aching back. You may think at first that you are only tired; but as this trouble increases day by day, kidney disease, with all its terrors, is fast claiming you as a victim.

Mr. Geo. Cummings, for over 20 years engineer on the Grand Trunk running between Toronto and Allandale, says: "The constant duty with my work gave me excessive pains in my back, racking my kidneys. I tried several remedies until I was recommended by my fireman, Mr. Dave Conley, to try Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. Two boxes have completely cured me and I feel to-day a better man than ever. I recommend them to all my friends."

Mixed Paint

that contains the right ingredients, the right amount of each, mixed right, is better paint than any man can stir up with a stick out of the raw materials. When a man buys some white lead and some oil and mixes some paint for himself, he is as much behind the times as a woman who should grind her own grain into flour. THE SHERWIN-WILLIAMS PAINTS contain white lead in just enough—because white lead is one ingredient of good paint. They contain some zinc—not too much—because good paint requires zinc. They are the best paints made to-day, because the best materials, best machinery and most skillful workmen are employed in making them.

THE SHERWIN-WILLIAMS PAINTS

are made differently for different uses—with different qualities for outside and inside work, rough painting and decorative painting. Get the right kind for your work. "Paint Points," the book we send free, will help you to paint wisely and well.

Artificial Teeth on Metal Plates

A dentist who knows his business, and one that has any regard for his patients' will always advise them to have a metal plate.

PROF. MEDVILLE B. BUCKLEY,
Instructor Boston Dental College,
Boston Mass

In view of the vast amount of injury done to the mouths of wearers of rubber or vulcanite plates, by the retention of undue heat, owing to the non conductivity of rubber, and as aluminum is now so cheaply produced, and making as it does a rigid, light, clean, unobjectionable plate there seems no reason why any person should wear a rubber or vulcanite plate. Not only this, but better results in fit and adhesion are obtained in difficult cases, than in the use of rubber.

L. P. E. BUELL, D. D. S.
Chicago HI Dental School

The above quotations are from hundreds of eminent dentists whose close observation in many years experience in plate work has learned them the many advantages of metal over rubber.

Many persons who are compelled to wear artificial teeth on a plate find that the ordinary plate causes heating of the mouth, bad taste, shrinkage of the gums, etc., finally causing the plate to get loose, sometimes sore lips, sore mouths and sore throats, and caused directly from the wearing of an ordinary plate.

We recommend a metal plate either of Gold, Platinum, Aluminum.

It is a conductor of heat and cold, it is non-irritating, and is thinner, lighter, and stronger than any other plate.

We have testimonials from persons for whom we have made metal plates—not one would wear an ordinary plate again. You can have your impression taken, and a metal plate made same day, fully guaranteed because we make them ourselves, and know all about the material used. Call and see specimens of our work.

Every piece of work done by us must give entire satisfaction to the patient, else we will not allow it to leave our office.
